GEOGRAPHY IS BEST LEARNED WHEN IT IS LIVED.

At Avenues: The World School, a global orientation is fused into the curriculum.

Classes at every level introduce topics, perspectives and challenges designed to help students gain a better understanding of our interconnected world. And every Avenues student will graduate with fluency in a second language.

It's all part of a World Course, brought to life by a team of educators with diverse backgrounds — a truly relevant education for our children's future.

As our network of campuses soon expands to other cities — including Beijing and São Paulo — students will have the opportunity to enrich their experience by studying abroad.

For families who have recently relocated to New York City, or those considering an independent school education, Avenues is accepting qualified students into classes where we still have available spaces.

If you'd like to learn more about Avenues admissions for fall 2013 or fall 2014, you are invited to attend a parent information event. Register at avenues.org or call Avenues admissions at 646.664.0800.

“It's a miracle that after 15 years of unsuccessful treatment I now have my arm under control. I'm able to wear my normal clothing again. My doctor put me on a Sequential Circulator and the swelling went down. There was no longer a buildup of excess fluid under my arm and shoulder area. The previous treatment consisted first of massage then a wrap with a special low stretch bandage with foam underneath. I also had to wear a compression sleeve night and day that made my arm hurt so badly I could not sleep. The Bio Compression Sequential Circulator system allows me to lead a normal life and cost much less than manual treatment, which must be administered by a therapist. Your system is also easy to use, which is important since I'll be taking this treatment the rest of my life. With all this behind me, I wanted to let you know how happy I am with your Sequential Circulator.”

Hamptons Commercial Investment Opportunity

Once in a lifetime

The Village Latch Inn is available for the first time in 40 years for $23,000,000. This century-old hotel property on 5.24 acres in Southampton Village awaits the discerning investor with vision to capitalize on creating a luxury lifestyle destination. Numerous possibilities exist to fully leverage this excellent location and multiple uses - as a boutique hotel, health spa, restaurant, multi-family residences, corporate retreat, or residential subdivision. South of the highway, in a park-like setting, 8 unique buildings feature a variety of charming rooms and suites, along with pool and tennis. Frequented by international celebrities, dignitaries, socialites and politicians, the property is a short walk to Southampton's shopping, restaurants, galleries and nightlife, and minutes to golf and world-famous beaches. Existing approvals, surveys, architectural site plans, yield map, and Suffolk County Department of Health Services (SCDHS) requirements for the expansion of the site are available showing the property's potential for development. Let your imagination run wild.

ICE CREAM

I went up in my bathing suit to get an ice cream cone at the East Hampton Main Beach lunch counter on Saturday. There was only this older man with a six-year-old in front of me, but the man was having a nasty go at the poor teenage soda jerk. The flavor the man wanted wasn't there. It was supposed to be. He got madder and madder. Finally he said, "I'll be back. And I don't want to lose my place in line." The two went off. Somebody was getting the bad news. We waited. They didn't return. How long do we wait? Hesitantly I ordered a vanilla cone. The boy scooped it as fast as he could while we both watched the screen door. I paid and got out of Dodge.

J. Biebs on the dance floor?! After flying into Westhampton's Gabreski Airport, pop star Justin Bieber and 14 friends went to South Pointe, the popular Southampton nightspot, last Saturday. The group reportedly danced for an hour. Later in the evening a fight broke out, widely reported in the media.

A South Fork screening of The Spectacular Now, an upcoming teen drama, drew many film fans, including director James Ponsoldt, producers Andrew Lauren and Tom McNulty, stars Miles Teller and Shailene Woodley, and Lauren Bush Lauren, Aida Turturro, Christie Brinkley and Zosia Mamet to The Crow's Nest restaurant in Montauk.

Water Mill's Jennifer Lopez is reportedly close to signing a deal with FOX to return to American Idol as a judge next season.

The multitalented Bob Spiotto has stepped down from his position as the first Executive Director of the Suffolk Theater in Riverhead.

Actor Liev Schreiber reportedly took a helicopter to the Hamptons to celebrate his son's birthday on the beach.

This week's cover is another by Mickey Paraskevas. His comic strip "The Green Monkeys" can be enjoyed every day of the week at thegreenmonkeys.com. And best of all, Lili, The Green Monkeys' dog, has her very own blog that can be read at lilibruno.com. Lili has all the gossip and doings in her complicated, dizzying and dazzling life. DOWN IN THE TUBE

Lady Gaga was seen on the subway traveling between Southampton and Water Mill last Tuesday afternoon. Many straphangers were staring at her with their mouths open.

DELAY DUE TO SNAKES

Just before dawn on Thursday morning out at the Montauk yards, moments before the first train went out, a maintenance man came upon a rattlesnake in one of the cars. He could hear its rattle. Others assisted him and they distracted it, then dropped a garbage can over it, slid a piece of cardboard in under it, and captured it. Later that morning, around 11 a.m., a passenger came upon a python in a subway car traveling westbound between Quogue and Quogue. After some commotion, it too was overwhelmed and captured. Both snakes have been turned over to the Snake Humane Society in Riverhead to be re-released into the wild in Arizona. We are sorry for the 30-minute delay throughout the system when all that happened.

SNAKES ON A SUBWAY

Next Friday at 9 p.m., Commissioner Aspinall is pleased to announce that a movie short, made by his daughter Wendy for a class project in the East Manhattan Film School she is attending, will be shown on a screen set up in the company cafeteria at the Hampton Subway Headquarters building in Hampton Bays. It is 25 minutes long, everyone is welcome to attend, and we are certain it will be quite something. It is called Snakes on a Subway and was filmed on our very own Hampton Subway late last Wednesday, just before the system shut down at 2 a.m. Good for you, girl, staying up until that late hour!

SUBWAY TRANSFERS WORTH A LOT

Many collectors still buy and sell old subway transfer tickets, printed up but never used back in 1932 and 1933 when the subway system was built, was about to be put into service but then was not (back then.)

The original idea for them was that a subway token, bought at a token booth outside the turnstiles, would be good for a ride from just one stop to another, but once on, these subway transfer tickets could be bought from the subway conductors while traveling to the destination. (The tokens cost two cents in 1932, the transfers one cent. That was a lot of money in those days). Having the transfer thus meant when you took your return trip or continued on your trip, it would be a bargain.

One hundred thousand transfer tickets were printed in 1932 in anticipation of the opening. When the subway did not open because of the arrest of the builder of the system, most of these unused transfer tickets were taken to the dump. But a few hundred remained, left in a desk drawer.

The transfer tickets have no value today. Since there is only one route for the Hampton Subway, there is nothing to transfer to, and, anyway, the original idea for them was just a way to sucker in people and then charge them more. No subway system today charges extra for a second ride if you embark upon it without leaving the system.

Nevertheless, framed subway transfer tickets in "new" condition sell for as much as $3,500 at the New York auction houses, and in a batch of ten, sold off at an online auction last week, brought $31,812.10 from an unidentified buyer.

COMMISSIONER ASPINALL'S MESSAGE

FARE AND FOUL

A man in Southampton got into a taxi and told the driver that he needed a ride to his hotel. When they arrived and the driver asked for the $20 fare, the man refused and said that it was too much money, then threw two dollars at the cab driver. When the passenger was told that he had to pay more, he punched the driver in the face. Police responded to the incident and arrested the dollar tosser, who had to pay the fare, then pay some jail time.

EGGED

A man in Amagansett reported that his car had been egged and his tires slashed by an unknown person. When police investigated, they found that he had received text messages and threatening voicemails from another man, who also had been by his house the night before. Police confronted the suspect, who told them he didn't have anything to do with messing up the car but agreed to no longer contact the victim. The perpetrator remains at large, but we have a feeling nobody will be making scrambled eggs on this man's car anymore.

SHELTER ISLAND

Old Man McGumbus, 103 years old, current Grand Warlock Supreme Ruler for the Shelter Island African Honey Bee Rhinoceros Club and former World War II artillery gunner, made headlines last week when he went to pay $4,322 in parking tickets with pennies. McGumbus, who has illegally parked his pickup truck on the front lawn of the Shelter Island Coffee and Hipster House on more than one occasion, says that he's paying the fine with pennies because, "Each penny represents a wish that the hipsters will leave Shelter Island, or at the very least, join the military."

BUCKING A TREND

Several deer hunters in Southampton Village are suffering from depression after five 12-point bucks were spotted frolicking around Willis Street. It's illegal to hunt deer in Southampton Village, and the deer seem to be catching on.

ON THE LOOSE

Police in East Hampton responded to reports that a small, white dog was running around the village and the owner was nowhere to be found. Police found the dog, checked its collar and then called the owner, who was searching for the pup.

NOT COOL

A cooler loaded with beer and wine was stolen in Montauk last week. The victims said that they had roughly $30 worth of alcohol inside the cooler. May karma descend upon the culprit.

The Panoramic View, Montauk

$100 Million Ponzi Scheme?

An Attempt to Renovate a Montauk Resort Gets Completely Out of Hand

BY DAN RATTINER

Beginning around 2005, many old fishing lodges and motels in Montauk got sold and converted into summertime hot spots for the Hamptons set. Some changed their names to become Sole East, Montauk Beach House, Navy Beach and The Surf Lodge (located on the gentle waters of Fort Pond.) Others kept their classic names, but got a full New York City high-tech overhaul. And the crowds came.

Thus nothing seemed wrong when the Panoramic, a 50-year old 117-room resort and residence development that spills down a cliff face to the ocean beach, was sold in 2007 to two men from Nassau County. They were Brian R. Callahan and Adam J. Manson.

The fact is, however, the men ran smack into four very difficult problems after making this purchase. For one thing, the real estate market collapsed late that year. For another, the Panoramic was in great disrepair from its years and years of neglect and assault from ocean storms. Nearly all the resort would have to be rebuilt, and that would mean shutting it down for a while. For a third thing, the Town of East Hampton, which has jurisdiction of Montauk, began, in my opinion, to give this project a hard time causing delay after delay. And fourth, as it turned out, the men had borrowed the money from a bank to pay not only for the initial $30 million purchase but for the expensive renovations which were now proceeding. Two years passed. In 2009, the men re-opened at least part of the resort as the Panoramic View Resort & Residences and invited in potential buyers. But the units didn't sell. And now the bank wanted the loan paid back. There was no money now though, and not much hope of getting any. One option they might have had at that point was bankruptcy. They didn't choose that option.

Last Thursday, Federal Prosecutors arrested the men and charged them with 24 counts of conspiracy to commit securities and wire fraud, using several investment funds Callahan managed that contained other people's money. There were many millions of dollars in these funds, and this cash was supposed to be invested safely in financial securities—mutual funds, hedge funds and other instruments. But, according to the charges, when the loans from the banks came due for the Panoramic, Callahan began dipping into the investment funds and diverting money to pay the loans and the bills for their Panoramic project to keep it afloat, then hiding the fact they were doing that.

Soon, according to the charges, they took it a step further. They began operating a Ponzi scheme. Callahan would (Cont'd on next page) declare excellent returns at his investment funds, returns they were not getting, and these claims would attract new clients to bring in new money. With this money, the funds would pay the earlier investors the high dividends, and that would bring in still more new money. According to the FBI, the Montauk Fire Department was in for $600,000, with promises it would be invested in mutual funds and other securities. In the end, the scheme had taken in nearly $100 million, according to the Feds. A lawsuit was filed last year by the Securities and Exchange Commission about the lost funds. And then on Thursday came these indictments. Mr. Callahan has been released on $2 million secured bond. Mr. Manson has been released on $1 million secured bond.

A statement was issued by Loretta E. Lynch, the United States Attorney for the Eastern District.

"The men employed all the tricks in the typical con man's bag," she said, including forgery, fake documents and stealing identities. "The lies stop now."

As for the Securities and Exchange Commission lawsuit, it says it is seeking money not only from Callahan and Manson, but also from Callahan's wife and Manson's sister, who the SEC claims has offshore accounts. Lawyers for the two men say they have done nothing wrong. They are pleading not guilty.

And yet, if they did do these things, is it possible that they did it all to save the Panoramic, and that its purchase and repairs could have run up toward $100 million?

A New York Times article last Thursday headlines TWO USED PONZI SCHEME TO PAY FOR MONTAUK RESORT RENOVATIONS, PROSECUTORS SAY. And in the article, there doesn't appear any report of wildly extravagant spending. There are no 200-foot yachts, no private planes, no trips around the world. Mentioned in the indictment are money spent for golf club fees, down payments on a home in Old Westbury and a condo in Westhampton and payments on luxury cars.

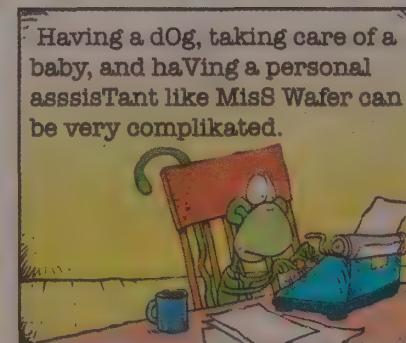

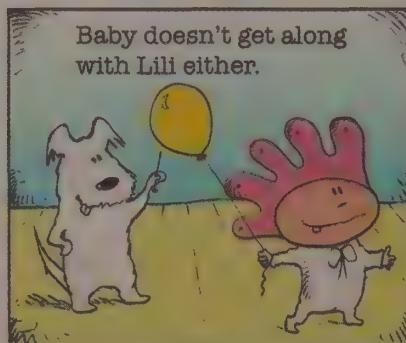

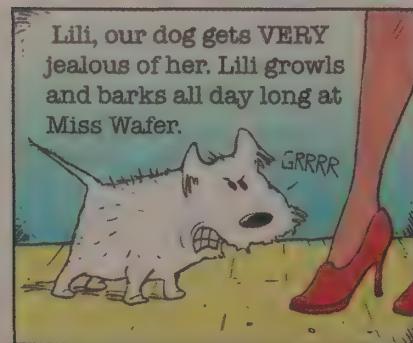

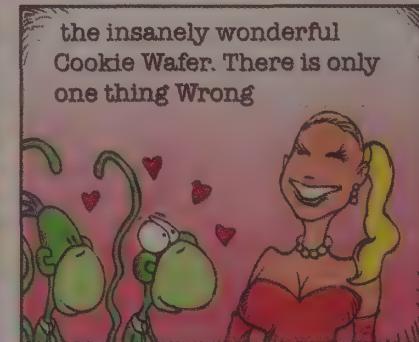

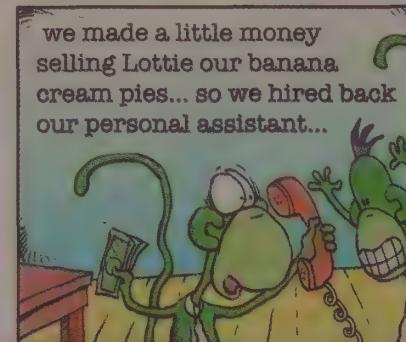

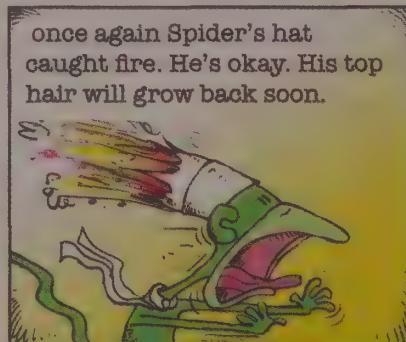

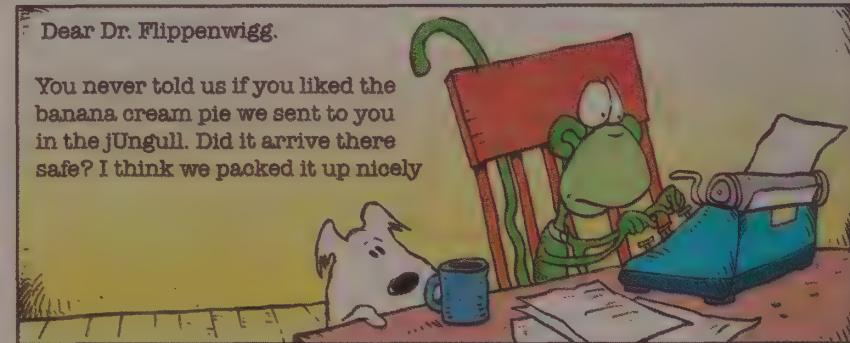

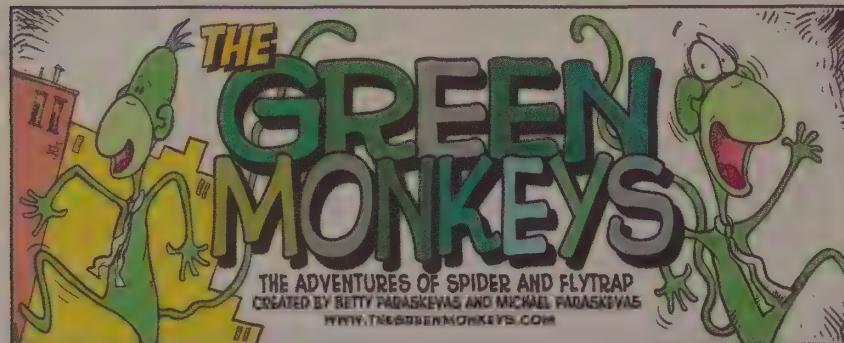

Maybe it WAS what the Panoramic cost. In December of 2010, I wrote an article objecting to what I believed was an unfair ganging up on the renovation at the Panoramic by the Town of East Hampton. Here was a beautiful old resort, built by the French family in 1959 before zoning, now in serious need of repair, now sold and being restored by an outside investor who was doing, it seemed to me, everything the town asked. Yet here were some town officials saying the Panoramic was now putting up illegal elevators, illegal new buildings—maybe one six stories high, new rooms out of outdoor porches, parking lots re-graded without approval from the planning board and so forth and so on. One official said wasn't it strange how they got the building permit almost immediately after the sale. Was there something up with the Building Department? Writing this got me an invitation from Adam Manson. I should come down and see all their construction and renovations for myself.

Because the Panoramic sits on a cliff face leading down to the ocean, you really don't see the whole place up close and personal unless you are invited. What you do see from the road are two low buildings behind a parking lot off the Old Montauk Highway. Behind, everything leads down to the sea. In all the years I have been in Montauk and the Hamptons, I'd only been to the Panoramic one or two times. I eagerly accepted the invitation, and came with my wife who also wanted to see it.

Manson, a tall, handsome man in his late 30s, was very enthusiastic about the project. He showed us the plans, led us through buildings that had been finished, others that were underway and still others that were in their original state.

There were no elevators, no six-story buildings, no enclosed porches. In every building, because the resort pre-existed zoning, all structures had to be exactly as they had been. All the doors and windows were redone exactly in the same place. All the porches and outbuildings had to remain the same. Nothing could be enclosed. We looked it over. Everything conformed to exactly that.

"One exception," Manson told me, "was that today the state requires roof pitches to be a minimum of 40 degrees. But some of our buildings had 30-degree pitches. We had to do something. And we couldn't raise the roofs. So we lowered the walls. And then, with permission, we put false dormers so the exterior would look nice. But they are not a (Continued on page 48)

SAGAPONACK POLICE CAR DESIGNS

A Sagaponack Idea

How Often Do You Get a Chance to Design a Whole New Police Force?

BY DAN RATTINER

Sagaponack Village is considering establishing its own police force. It's rather a startling development. The whole village is just eight years old. It was founded as a reaction to an attempt by a group of oceanfront residents wishing to make an official village approximately 200 yards wide and five miles long along Sagaponack's beachfront and in neighboring communities. The only way to stop this was to incorporate the unincorporated hamlet of Sagaponack into a village. Beat them to the punch. They did that, voting 285 to 11 to create the Village of Sagaponack.

On the other hand, it seems to have been a good thing to do, now that they've done it. They bought a former artist's home on the Montauk Highway and made it into a lovely village hall. They have a village seal. They have an official flag. They elected a mayor and a council passed some laws. And they now preside over a two-by-two-and-a-half-mile potato-shaped community that sports some of the most expensive property in the country. For a number of years, the private income of the people of Sagaponack topped the list of wealthiest zip codes in the nation. It's a pretty fancy place.

Of course, they have not yet gotten around to providing all services a village usually provides. There is no Sagaponack Highway Department, for example. And until now there has been no Sagaponack Police Department. The village contracts out these things to the Town of Southampton, which surrounds the village on three sides. The cost for police services per year, for example, is $2 million. And that means if Sagaponack were to put together its own police force, they'd have for starters this $2 million they now pay others. That's a big chunk of money, $2 million, although it's just a piece of pocket change to most of the residents.

If Sagaponack decides to have a police department, they're going to need a lot of things. This then is a unique opportunity. Only once in a lifetime does one get an opportunity to decide how to equip a police department. Here are some suggestions.

If Sagaponack is going to have a police force, they are going to need police cars. And they don't have to be regular police cars.

For example, they could be plug-in electric police cars to help save the environment. After all, at 4.7 square miles, they wouldn't be expecting any high-speed chases. People trying that would be inside Sagaponack and back outside in a minute and a half at high speed, if my calculations are correct. So go the proper route. Save the environment.

Or, if they didn't like the idea of electric cars, they could do it a different way. Maserati makes a wonderful four-door sedan. I've seen them. There'd be nothing but the best for our police force. And it would be a first for Maserati.

Put the village seal and the words SAGAPONACK POLICE on the sides of the police cars, then put a three-word slogan under it. No other police department out here has a slogan on the side. But then, the wealthy of Sagaponack are mostly from the City of New York, which does. New York City's police slogan is COURTESY, PROFESSIONALISM, RESPECT. We could find something appropriate. I know. It should not be three words, it should be two. Nine tenths of the population is rich New Yorkers. But more than half the land in Sagaponack is potato farms. Make it a salute to the potato farmers. Put EAT POTATOES on the sides of the police cars. And put on the roof of whichever kind of car they get a Potato Bazooka, of the kind used in the American Revolution to fire Long Island potatoes and drive back the British Redcoats as they tried to wade across the Shinnecock Canal.

It's important to equip the police properly to keep law and order in a community. Each officer will need to carry a gun, for example. I vote they make it a fake gun. You wouldn't want anybody to get shot in Sagaponack. They should have lots (Continued on next page) of lights and flashlights. The biggest crime problem in Sagaponack to deal with would be second-story break-ins to private homes by burglars at night. We all know Willie Sutton's famous phrase, "I rob banks because that's where all the money is." Inside the homes of Sagaponack are valuable antiques and paintings and jewelry. Everybody knows that. Also, you know the phrase "If a rich guy drops a thousand dollar bill on the floor, he doesn't bother to pick it up." So there is that there. The police should have lots of flashlights and flood lights not only on their persons but on their vehicles. Also bullhorns. Many of these great mansions are up long driveways. "Stop!" they could say. And it would be heard.

I also think the police should be equipped with bouquets of flowers they can, at a moment's notice, present to the wives of the owners of the homes in Sagaponack. It would be a nice touch. They should also wear sneakers as regulation footwear. So you wouldn't hear them coming. But they should have a pair of boots they carry in a backpack, which they can take out when it's mud season in the potato farms.

There are four kinds of police officers in most communities. But you wouldn't need all four kinds in Sagaponack. There are no sidewalks in Sagaponack, for example, except for the 80-yard walk between the Two Room Schoolhouse and the Sagg General Store and Post Office. So you wouldn't need the cops that walk the beat.

You would need, however, the regular police people to drive around in the Maseratis or the electric cars or whatever. And you would need the detectives. I would give them undercover uniforms—they could wear blue sweatshirts with baggy blue pants held up by bicycle clips at the ankles. That's what the famous detective Orlan O'Rourke wears in all those books about him written by that famous Sagaponack author, I forget his name for the moment. He smokes a pipe. The author, that is.

You'd also need summertime police to enforce the parking regulations during that period. Visitors come to Sagaponack in the summertime. Or try to. That's why we put up the No Parking signs during that season. The summer police should be in the regular police uniforms all the regular policemen wear, but without the boot backpacks and with reflective yellow vests that read OH NO YOU DON'T.

The biggest problem for the Sagaponack Police Force might be, however, where you'd bring a perpetrator once you cuff him. At the present time, the police from Southampton drive the perps to Southampton Town where they have a jail with an overnight lockup in it. That's a pretty good thing and not a situation anybody in Sagaponack would like to change, but then when you take things into your own hands, well, you'll just have to put up the perps.

You can buy lockups. They are made of steel, have bars on the front and can be bolted together. You can buy them online. Trucks deliver them. You just have to have the room. But where?

There is only one municipal building in Sagaponack, as I said, the Village Hall. It's small, as I said, a former two-bedroom affair, and at the present time, it's filled with clerks and filing cabinets and a mayor's office. Maybe the lockup could be put down at the Sagg Store, or at the school. But maybe that would be a bad idea. You couldn't put it at the post office, anyway. That's federal and they've got their own problems. So it has to be at Village Hall. Maybe you could buy a small model lockup, not a cheap one, after all, because this is Sagaponack, but small sized, though large enough so a prisoner could move around a bit but small enough so that it could fit in one of the Village Hall's upstairs bedroom closets. That would work.

Eventually, though, putting in a police department is like getting married. You get kids, you get a bigger house, you get two cars, you get all the toys and barbecues and decorators and other stuff. With a police department, it will lead to a building out back for the department. (I envision it with two entrances. The prisoners come in one entrance where the police sit elevated on a platform. And at the second entrance, the wealthy come in to report things and look down at the policemen sitting below the platform.)

And there you can have the police lockup, next to the evidence room, the locker room, the courtroom, the judge's chambers, the police car garage, the weapons room and the cafeteria. Also the firing range out back.

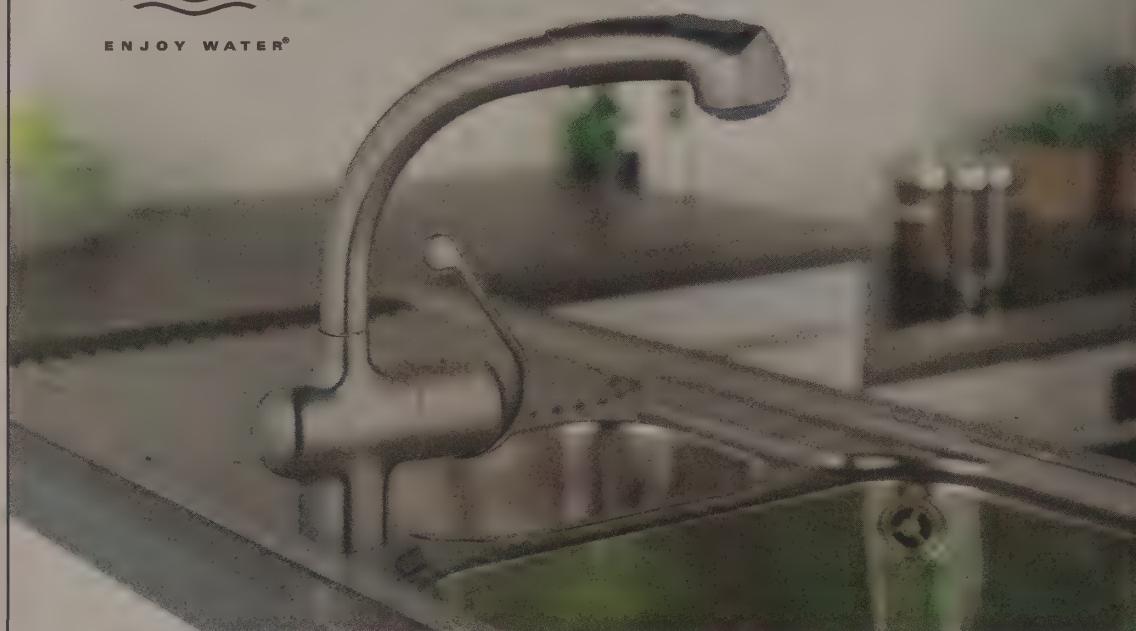

Did somebody ask what official colors the police uniforms should be? Why, of course, blue. They're the police.

As we go to press, we learn that the Village of West Hampton Dunes is considering putting together its own police force. That's interesting.

The Jersey Invasion

Bankers, Hispanics, WASPs, Wall Streers, Celebrities, and, uh, Snooki?

BY DAN RATTINER

“You’ve been out here how long? The Hamptons must have really changed since then.”

Boy has it. Many times.

In the 1950s the Hamptons was a very peaceful rural area. There were local people—fishermen and farmers—a reclusive summer enclave of wealthy New Yorkers with old money, a few famous people, mostly artists and writers, seeking peace and quiet off the beaten path. A dog could sleep on the white line in the middle of the road. And all the stores were closed on Sundays. But there were also tourists. Many of them were headed not for the Hamptons but for Montauk where the motels had just been built and there was a considerable bar scene. Young people caroused into the wee hours on weekends in the summertime. I was among them. (I moved as a teenager from Millburn, New Jersey to Montauk with my mom and dad when my dad bought White’s Pharmacy).

In the 1960s, wealthy people with “new” money began to appear in the Hamptons. Many of them “discovered” Sag Harbor, which was falling apart and filled with historic old cottages now abandoned that they could fix up. None were welcome behind the hedgerows. Also, a huge “grouper” bar scene appeared in Amagansett and Westhampton Beach. Young people crammed into private homes, with a landlord selling “summer shares.” The scene in Amagansett was Fromm’s for breakfast, Asparagus Beach (now Atlantic), so named because everyone on the beach stood up as if they were at a mixer, Martell’s at night. Montauk continued to thrive as a motel resort community with a busy nightlife. As for those behind the hedgerows, the wealthy people with old money: They hated the tourists, the new money people and the groupers and wished they would go away.

In the 1970s, crowds of cars for the first time sat in traffic jams coming out to the Hamptons and Montauk on Friday nights and going back to the city on Sunday night. In them were tourists, groupers, fishermen, old money and new money people. There also now began to be people from the film and theater industry. Montauk was in its heyday in the 1970s. The “grouper” scene in Amagansett thrived. Hippies were seen on Jobs Lane in Southampton in that decade, a shocking thing. The North Fork wine industry began. And the environmental movement sprang up.

In the 1980s, the wealthy old money people behind the hedgerows began to think they might have to make peace with all the newcomers, since, in fact, none of them were taking the hint and going away. Draconian laws in East Hampton drove out all the “groupers” from their share houses. Families returned. Other East Hampton laws, affecting Montauk, resulted in the reining in of motel development in that community. Paparazzi and gossip columnists were now trailing around anybody who was a celebrity. The farms began to give way to residential development, which, because of four-acre zoning, were being built largely as giant McMansions to be purchased by people with “new” money. Westhampton Beach, beginning now to rein in the “grouper” scene, found themselves being overrun by Hell’s Angels and other rough types. There was real fear that Westhampton Beach would fall into decay. The “new” money people began to outbid the “old” money people for many of the mansions behind the hedgerows. Integration between these two groups proceeded, along with polite apologies for prior behavior. Montauk began to fall into decline.

In the 1990s, waves of Hispanic immigrants began arriving, easing a labor shortage and adding a spice to the scene. The Hamptons now was beginning to look stunning, with highly manicured gardens, clipped and beautified lawns and fields. It was now rising into the upper echelons of world class resorts. The Hampton Classic horse show became known around the world. Hampton Polo began. The Hamptons International Film Festival came into existence. The North (Continued on next page)

It appears that those who used to go to the Jersey Shore have said, "If we can't afford the Hamptons, we'll go there anyway!"

Fork wine industry thrived. Much open space was saved. Dozens of fundraisers held under white tents filled weekend nights all summer. Helicopters began to become a problem. Tourism declined, as those wishing to tour here found they couldn't afford it. And Westhampton righted itself with culture, the arts, hanging planters and flowers.

In the 2000s, the real estate market went through the roof, taking the price of homes to where no man had ever gone before. Then it all went south. With the beginning of the recession, stores began to close during the off-season. East Hampton suffered the worst of that. Downtown was a ghost town in January. Sag Harbor, however, thrived with mom-and-pop stores as tourism picked up there. Then, surprisingly, the Hamptons discovered Montauk, with a youth scene livening up the place. The Hamptons celebrity tent scene went into decline, with smaller and fewer events. And large corporations began renting houses for the summer and making them available to clients and staff. The Shinnecock Indian Reservation came alive, and Riverhead, of all places, began to stir.

And now we come to today, which can be called the "Post Sandy" era. The Hamptons stands tall as a major world-class resort in three seasons of the year. Montauk is reborn, a delightful bar scene on weekend nights and a sportsmen's paradise of surfing, hang-gliding, fishing, running, tennis, golf and all manner of other athletic activity at all other times. Sag Harbor, dressed to the nines in its historic splendor, is filled with tourists. And "old" and "new" money mingle. But there's a new disturbing development.

This year, the tourists are back, in force. It appears that all those who used to go to the Jersey Shore, my teenage stomping grounds, have taken a deep breath and said, "well because of Sandy there's no Jersey Shore anymore. And if we can't afford the Hamptons, we are going there anyway." And they are here. Many beaches are jammed. Nightspots are overrun. Bad manners abound. People are having all-night parties in their homes. There was the report of one man in the Hamptons, with no permits and loud parties all night, greeting the police with a $15,000 check if they would go away. They didn't. Thousands come like lemmings to rock concerts in open fields. And through it all, Old Money and New, arm in arm, say, "Something has to be done." Let us see to it the Jersey Shore is built back up, quick.

Last Saturday afternoon, carrying grocery bags in a crosswalk at a red light on North Main Street in East Hampton, I was almost run over by a man driving a small white Mercedes convertible coming around the bend from a side street. I stopped in that crosswalk right in front of him, a deer in the headlights holding groceries, and he screeched to a halt just a few feet from hitting me. Then, stopped and irritated, he extended his arm, and dismissively waved me across in front of him. Make it fast, it said. And as I got out of his way, he looked over at the blond girl sitting next to him, hit the gas, and peeled away down the street.

I watched him go. Yup. Jersey plates. Ohmigod! These are MY people.

What's Being Done to Snapping Turtles on the East End Has Got to Stop

BY MR. SNEIV

One of the reasons I moved to the Hamptons was for the culture. Specifically, I viewed it as a place where people had a heightened awareness, especially when it came to social issues. And it was the last place I expected to find genuine prejudice. However, recent events have caused me to see things in a different light.

It all started with a leisurely walk at Town Pond. I had not a care in the world and was taking in the beauty of the surroundings. Then I spied two young girls, probably between 8 and 10 years of age, throwing rocks at a snapping turtle, who was peeking his head above the water's surface. As if that wasn't enough, they were also shouting expletives at the turtle at the same time. Things like, "Why did you have to kill that baby swan, you son of a bitch!" There were also references to the turtle being a "baby killer."

Is this what we are teaching our children? I decided to explore the situation and asked the children why they were so mad at the snapping turtle. The response was simple, "My mother told me that she read in the paper that a snapping turtle killed the cute little baby swan."

"What paper?" I asked.

"The one with the pretty paintings on the front" was their response.

OMG, I thought. I am a contributing writer for a paper that fosters prejudice against snapping turtles. I could not stand by and let this go unaddressed. But in order to write an article that would change public perception, I knew I would need facts.

I must confess that I have a deep affection for all turtles. When I was a child, my mother gave me a stuffed turtle that I slept with every night. He kept me safe for many years.

I started by researching the recent article in question, that the girls had referenced. In doing so, I discovered that it was not specifically stated that a snapping turtle ate the baby swan, but it was certainly inferred, along with the possibility of a fox. Surprisingly, the article does not offer one shred of evidence that a snapping turtle actually killed the baby swan. There were no eyewitnesses, no videotape and no call to 911. I canvassed the neighborhood and no one reported any swan screaming. In the absence of evidence, how can we cast aspersions upon the snapping turtles of the East End? To do so is both reckless and irresponsible.

Just because the turtle chooses to live in a pond doesn't make it any less important than any other type of turtle. Are these East End snapping turtle haters not the same people that so fervently contribute to saving the lives of newly hatched sea turtles? Are these not the very same people who would stop and remove an eastern box turtle from the road, so it won't be hit by a passing car? Are these not the very same people who would cry if they saw on the evening news that the last Galapagos Island turtle had vanished from the face of the earth?

Yes, readers. I am writing this article in defense of the snapping turtles of the East End. If it were not for these turtles, our local ecosystem would be so out of whack that we would have more to complain about than a missing baby swan. Snapping turtles create indentations in the bottom of the pond that serve as breeding grounds for various fish. In this way they help to sustain the fish populations. They also keep the frog population in check. If there were too many frogs, the croaking sound would be so loud that we would not be able to sleep at night. They eat menacing insects as well.

Snapping turtle prejudice has to stop. Some of these turtles are said to live up to 150 years or more. There was an instance where, in the late 1990s, a snapping turtle was found that had a musket ball from the Civil War still lodged in its shell.

Now, back to the accusations. How do we know the little swan (cygnet) did not succumb to a natural death? How do we know it wasn't kidnapped and is living in someone's backyard fishpond? I do recognize that it was not unequivocally stated that the turtle was responsible for the demise of the cygnet, but it was definitely the first one mentioned as a suspect. And that is what I call prejudice my friend.

Haters might want to also take note that snapping turtles also kill rats. Do you want rats in your house? In the summer, when the mother rat takes her baby rats down to the pond for a swim and the baby rats are out in the water, the snapping turtles sneak up on them and pull them down to a watery death. After that, they eat the little carcasses.

Wow. I never realized that snapping turtles were so violent. I am starting to think it was a snapping turtle that killed the baby swan. Might I too be prejudiced?

second story. They do add extra light into the rooms though."

The parking lot that was re-graded?

"There was no re-grading. There was a requirement that we put in propane heating tanks underground. So we dug holes in the parking lot. I think somebody saw the piles of dirt from the holes we dug. It was awhile before we put it all back. They must have thought that was a re-grading."

What about "the new building?" We looked at the plans.

"This is what they say is a new building," Manson said pointing to a drawing alongside a drawing of a building. "It's the second floor of the building alongside. This is how architects show a second floor. Off to the side."

Both my wife and I were very impressed with Manson and his project. He led us down brick paths between the buildings.

"These are old bricks, very hard to get," he said. "But we got replacements. The town insisted we use the same bricks as before. If we changed them we'd have to go through a planning process."

About half the buildings had been renovated. They were quite beautiful.

Whether he could sell this project I did not know. Asking price was $2 million for a double unit. But what was being done here would make the French family proud. And there were so many new amenities. New kitchens. Beautiful furnishings. There were portable hot tubs on the decks.

"You can sit in a tub and watch the waves," Manson said proudly.

As for the Montauk Fire Department, here were enthusiastic young men in finance with offices in Great Neck, and an investment fund that gave a great return—it made perfect sense they would put their money in Callahan's fund, if that is what they did.

Sadly, I have to report that, if true, this is the second time in the last ten years that the Montauk Fire Department got fleeced for more than a half million dollars.

In 2007, it was found that the longtime Montauk Fire District secretary-treasurer, a woman everybody trusted, secretly was embezzling money and writing checks to herself and others that, over time, had now amounted to more than $500,000. She was arrested and charged. She met with prosecutors and pleaded guilty. The district attorney said she used the money for such things as gambling in Las Vegas, for paying her child's private high school tuition, and for mortgage payments.

In the end, she agreed to pay what she owed by selling her house. She put it up for sale for $510,000. If she could make the restitution, the agreement said, she could serve one to three years in prison. If she failed, the maximum term would be longer, 5 to 15 years. This was in the fall of 2007. Shortly thereafter, the housing market collapsed. Now it was probably worth $300,000. And it didn't even sell for that. In fact, there were no takers at all.

In the end, this woman, Terri Gaines, put a family house in Southampton up for sale and sold it. She gave the Montauk house to her children. She gave the money to the fire department. Then, in 2009, she went to jail to serve out her shorter sentence.

As for the Montauk Fire Department's $600,000 investment in one of Callahan's funds, we've now learned it was only out at risk a short time. They withdrew the money, because "questions were raised about the vagaries of the fund," a fire department official told Newsday. "We got everything back."

L.I. Gay and Lesbian Services Network Opens in Sag Harbor

BY LEE MEYER

“An open door since 1844,” the Old Whalers’ (Presbyterian) Church in Sag Harbor is about to get a new tenant.

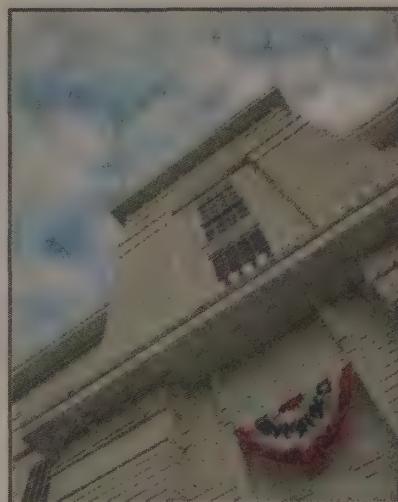

The Long Island Gay and Lesbian Services Network, a nonprofit organization that has centers to service the gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgender (GLBT) people in both Nassau and Suffolk Counties, has focused their latest initiative on the East End. The Hamptons GLBT Center, which will have its grand opening at its Sag Harbor location on August 10, is the Center’s first expansion in the Hamptons and was created to provide GLBT citizens, both young and old, with a safe space for support and community.

David Kilmnick, Chief Executive Officer of the Long Island Gay and Lesbian Services Network, is thrilled that the project has come to fruition. “It’s a long time in the making and long overdue that the East End had their own LGBT center,” says Kilmnick. “We’re focusing on providing a safe space for the community, arts and cultural programs and a way for folks to feel connected.” Kilmnick notes that prior to the Hamptons Center’s opening, the Bay Shore location was the closest location for East Enders. “This is going to give people better access to the programs and services that we’ve provided for over 20 years,” Kilmnick explained.

While the Network had been considering opening a Hamptons location for several years, it was the suicide of 16-year-old David Hernandez of East Hampton High School in September, 2012 that prompted the Network to take action. “We knew with the recent suicide of David Hernandez that we needed to do something,” Kilmnick said with a sigh. The Network has always been an advocate for GLBT youth, with the Long Island Gay and Lesbian Youth (LIGALY) initiative providing a safe space for teens across the island. “If the Hamptons Center was around, maybe the [David Hernandez] tragedy could have been avoided.” One of the first steps the Network took in the development of the center was to create a Youth Advisory Committee, which has been met with an enthusiastic response. Hernandez’s family has been involved, as well. “We didn’t know this until about four weeks ago—when David’s family heard we were opening an East End Center, they put cans at local delis to help raise money for it. His mom and his family are going to be at our opening,” Kilmnick said, noting that he hopes that getting involved with the Center will be part of the family’s healing process.

While the Center is going to provide local services and programs, it has received support from a national figure in the gay rights movement in Hamptons resident Edie Windsor, whose lawsuit against the federal government resulted in the Supreme Court’s declaring the Defense of Marriage Act (DOMA) to be unconstitutional. Windsor filed a lawsuit after being denied estate tax exemption following the death of her wife, Thea Spyer, because DOMA stated that estate tax exemption was only valid for heterosexual couples. “Folks don’t know this, but Edie Windsor has been honorary chair [of the Network board] for two years, before the DOMA decision,” says Kilmnick.

Old Whalers' Church, Sag Harbor

Kilmnick notes that the Hamptons Center’s current space is what he considers a “starter space” and that they’re looking to acquire a more permanent space with a full-time staff and a full slate of services in the near future. Still, he believes that the Hamptons Center is sure to be a boon to the GLBT community on the East End, and hopes to provide a safe space for anyone who is in need of support and guidance. ■

The Center will have its grand opening on Saturday, August 10, from 4–6 p.m. at its location at the Old Whalers’ Church in Sag Harbor. For more information on the Long Island Gay and Lesbian Services Network, go to lglbtnetwork.org.

Sailing Challenge, Caribbean Flavors Return to Sag Harbor

BY ERIC FEIL

Sailors and maritime mavens, rejoice. The second annual Antigua Barbuda Hamptons Challenge is almost here, which means the East End is closer to a Caribbean party than it's been at any time since, well...since the celebration following the inaugural Challenge regatta last August. When the competitors who set sail from the Breakwater Yacht Club in Sag Harbor this August 17 return to shore for the post-race party at Havens Beach, the reggae music will be playing, the drinks will be flowing, and the celebration will be decidedly lower-latitude.

"This year we're going to bring a little bit more of the Caribbean festival feeling to the after party, bring a little Antigua and Barbuda up here," promises Antigua and Barbuda Minister of Tourism John Maginley, who has been instrumental in bringing this event to the East End since the beginning. "This is going to be even more of a party."

The race is on!

But first things first—and the first thing is the race. Last year's regatta was a striking success, both in terms of the competition and in the merging of Maginley's Caribbean home with the East End, and as all eyes look toward an even larger success this year, from the money raised for local groups to the cultural crossover Maginley is building—"Hamptons in the summer, Antigua and Barbuda the rest of the year," he says in something of a mantra—we raise a nautical, numerical toast to the Antigua Barbuda Hamptons Challenge.

1—Defending champion, and that's Captain Jim Ryan and the crew of the boat Wasn't Me.

2—East End Youth organizations that will benefit from monies raised by the event—the Breakwater Yacht Club Junior Sailing Program and i-tri Transformation Through Triathlon.

3—Years since Maginley and Captains Guide magazine publisher Rob Roden initially discussed the idea of bringing a regatta to the Hamptons as a way of linking the sailing passion and lifestyle cultures of Antigua and Barbuda with the East End.

6—Crew members who can join the winning captain—an all-expenses-paid trip to Antigua Sailing Week 2014, one of the largest sailing events in the world. That's airfare, accommodations, entry fees and a yacht to sail in competition.

Peconic Sailing Association, whose members can win the grand prize this year

15 to 20—Miles the race course will cover, depending on particular conditions on race day

45—Dollars to attend the post-regatta celebration at 5 p.m. on August 17, if you get your tickets ahead of time ($55 will get you in at the door). That's right, even if you don't sail, you can join the party!

200—Maximum PHRF rating for competing boats. Translation: That's Performance Handicap Racing Fleet, a handicapping system that allows boats of different classes to compete against one another

1100—As in hours, as in the start time of the race (that's 11 a.m. to most of us)

1967—Year that Antigua Sailing Week was created, starting with 10 boats and evolving into a gathering of not just top sailors but revelers enjoying the parties taking place ashore throughout the sailing extravaganza—and now that includes champions from the East End.

Endangered Lion Gardiner Looking for Support, Funding

BY JOAN BAUM

The upcoming 100th anniversary next year of the fabled Lion Gardiner dining car built by the Pullman-Standard Company for the New York Central Railroad (NYC) in 1914 is not likely to set off a major national celebration, but it might well be an occasion for festivity among historians if the Lion Gardiner is saved. As railroad buffs know, The National Railway Historical Society (NRHS) this past April listed the Lion Gardiner—which may be the last heavyweight New York Central dining car in existence—as one of the “Top Eight Endangered Railroad Landmarks In the Country.”

Of course, the name, “Lion Gardiner,” resonates on the East End, and so a recent initiative to raise funds to refurbish this unique example of elegant railroad dining in the day takes on special significance. It was, in fact, says Elrond Lawrence, PR Director for NRHS, that very list—the first time the society compiled such a record—that spurred three organizations to “band together” to see if the dining car could be saved, and that prompted the inauguration of an annual Railroad Heritage Grant Program, which just awarded the Lion Gardiner $5,000.

The organizations—the Empire State Railway Museum (ESRM), Catskill Revitalization Corporation and the Ulster and Delaware Railroad Historical Society—have a twofold mission: raising public awareness and raising funds to restore or more likely refurbish significant relics. Except for railway buffs, not many people know about The Lion Gardiner, which is now owned by ESRM in Phoenicia, NY and resides in Kingston (Ulster County), about 25 miles from the city. More than money, though, would be needed to bring The Lion Gardiner back to a state where it could be displayed and perhaps even put into short-distance operation. Enthusiasts point out that the car would need continued loving care and funding. Reportedly, major damage includes a collapsed floor (“kitchen floor rot syndrome”) and obvious exterior corrosion.

Adding the family jewels to your estate? Think again!

You have planned your estate. You've determined the value of your retirement accounts, your life insurance policies, the equity in your home, cash accounts and investment holdings. All that's left is your personal property. Specifically, your jewelry.

Who will get your engagement ring and the valuable jewelry you've accumulated through the years?

Before you make your decision, consider some of the serious consequences of including jewelry in your estate:

Andrew Fabrikant, co-owner of Andrew & Peter Fabrikant, has seen the unfortunate results of dividing family jewelry. “Often families struggle with how the jewelry is to be distributed. The passing of heirlooms of unequal value creates tension, while dividing the proceeds of a sale is easily accomplished.”

Conflict

The emotional aspects of dividing jewelry cannot be understated. Engagement rings are usually the most valuable. If there's more than one family member, who gets the ring? What if it was inadvertently promised to more than one heir? What if an heir is bequeathed an item of lesser value? This could breed resentment and hard feelings.

Tax Concerns

“Jewelry can be problematic in estate settlement,” says Joseph LaFerlita, trust and estates attorney at Farrell Fritz. “I've seen the IRS disagree on evaluation, becoming a contentious issue for heirs. They can be forced to sell the jewelry at a lower price to cover estate taxes. For those with large collections, they should weigh the sentimental value against the burden they could be creating for their family members. In most cases, it makes sense to sell.”

Advantages

Selling your jewelry has powerful advantages. You can invest the money to be distributed amongst your heirs according to your preferences. There are no evaluation issues. There is no potential conflict amongst family members.

So how can you be certain you're getting the true value of your jewelry? “A reputable jewelry buyer will help his clients maximize the amount of money they can receive from their estate,” says Andrew Fabrikant. He should know—Andrew has helped many families dramatically increase the value of their estate by helping them sell their jewelry. He can help you too.

Naturalist, Artist Together Again in SCHS Exhibit

BY DEBBIE SLEVIN

Look at explorer and naturalist Dennis Puleston's painting of an owl (whose eyes seem to bore right into you) and off in the corner, behind the delicate rendition of the bird, you will see a red barn. That is where furniture artist and craftsman David Ebner had his first studio. "Puleson's wife saw Ebner's Rocking Horse, and he offered him the space," says Kathryn Curran, Director of the Suffolk County Historical Society. And they are together again in an exhibition that runs through September 28, 2013.

Chest of Drawers, Sapele

David Ebner

As one of the founders of the Environmental Defense Fund, Puleston, who passed away in 2001, had an immeasurable impact on conservation. Born on December 30, 1905 outside of London, he studied biology and naval architecture at London University, and ultimately settled in the United States, marrying Betty Wellington in 1939. He became an American citizen and served in World War II. After the war, Puleston was appointed the Director of Technical Information at the Brookhaven National Laboratory on Long Island. It was here that he fell in love with the Island's flourishing osprey population and wrote: "They were everywhere, repairing their huge stick nests on dead trees, utility poles and platforms erected especially for them. They even nested in the middle of towns and raised chick's right along the highway, oblivious to traffic."

Keeping detailed records of the osprey's reproductive history over several years, Puleston noticed a large decline in population. He discovered that as osprey parents attempted to incubate their eggs, the weight of their bodies was crushing the chicks' shells before hatching. Through his research he concluded that it was the result of pesticides, especially D.D.T.

Puleston and others filed a class action suit in New York State Supreme Court to force the Commission to stop using D.D.T. After presenting seven watercolors that he painted to illustrate how D.D.T. was destroying local wildlife, the Suffolk County Legislature banned the substance. As a result of Puleston's labors, the amount of D.D.T. residues in the environment dropped and the osprey were saved.

Having won the battle of osprey preservation, he was able to focus on his passions of painting and writing about Long Island wildlife. And it shows in his work. There is a delicacy of color and intimacy of expression in the birds. The painstaking detail of bark and feather is the result of a true observer.

Bryan Roesch, of Riverhead, came to see the exhibit. "I hiked with him in the '80s," he says. "He could call birds out of the woods."

"Toward the end of his life, he was going blind," says his daughter, Jennifer Puleston. "His eyesight changed his technique as it diminished."

From paintings of bark to the wood beneath, the love of nature informs the artists' work. And that is also evident in the furniture and accessories crafted by David Ebner.

"I approach my art intuitively as well as intellectually," he says, "drawing inspiration wherever I find it...each piece is treated as an art object with concern for my material and honesty to its inherent qualities."

❖ GUEST ESSAY ❖

The Way We Were

BY HERMINE MARIAUX

The year was 1965 when I made my maiden voyage to the Far East End of Long Island, before it became lovingly known as "The Hamptons."

I was scouting for houses I could photograph and feature in Town & Country Magazine, where I worked as an editor. Given the publication's wealthy readership, I was looking for "Old Money," more concentrated in Southampton at the time than in any of the other Hampton towns. Celebrity then was discreet and usually meant Society—I photographed Gloria Vanderbilt's estate with its original windmill, sheltered by Southampton's characteristic high privet hedges, while she was married to Wyatt Coopér—a brilliant writer and improbably good-looking man with arresting blue eyes. Their sons, Anderson, now CNBC's star anchor, reached just up to my waist while his younger brother, Carter, made it just up to my hip.

Others I tapped for publication were Charlotte Ford, C.Z. Guest, Lilly Pulitzer, Chessy Rayner and Lee Radziwill among many others that followed. Often they were patrons of another group of high profilers, artists and writers who had chosen the area as their second or even only home. They included Truman Capote whom I interviewed for The New York Times after the release of his blockbuster non-fiction work In Cold Blood, which had left him emotionally shattered and drained. De Kooning, Roy Lichtenstein, Jackson Pollock were honing their reputations as they found peace and concentration for their work in this beautiful and evolving region. Cultural activities centered largely on Southampton's Parish Art Museum and Guild Hall in East Hampton. For the aspirational young, the Benson Gallery in Bridgehampton became their first showcase and their main support system.

Jack Lenor Larsen was breaking ground for his first residence, "Round House" on his sprawling property on Stephen Hands' Path. Patterned after African kraals, native architecture he observed on his many visits to the subcontinent, were the inspiration, along with exotic native textiles which informed his own. "Long House," his second, and the astonishing gardens he created on site, later became the annual showcase we know today where artists from many genres are celebrated each summer.

Like so many before me, and many more after me, I yielded to the siren call of the area. Wanting to be a part of it, I soon started looking for a rental property. I found just what I wanted: a very large artist's studio on Jericho Lane in the Georgica estate section of East Hampton.

It was the perfect solution for both me and my husband. Trained as a fine painter, he had suffered the limitations of light and space of our Manhattan co-op. I watched him take out his frustration on our four walls which, on average, he repainted about every 3-4 months. While definitely the least disruptive "house painter" I have experienced in a long life of renovations, I nevertheless felt displaced by the process and I was also missing summers outdoors.

The studio I found was a simple two-story structure with huge windows facing north and a cavernous 60 ft. long open space offering no amenities beyond a (Cont'd on next page) shower, a dressing area and a hot plate. It was perfect. The rent was $1,200 for the season.

However, it must be said that "the season" in those days pretty much meant just two months. No restaurant, seasonal store or farm stand would open before July 4 and abruptly closed up came Labor Day.

When our joint summers as a couple came to an end, I set out to find a house of my own. Although I had an opportunity to buy a handsome Tudor on an acre of land just behind the dunes on Lilly Pond Lane—the price was $325,000—I opted for a smaller, less demanding property in East Hampton.

The house I settled on was an unpretentious farmhouse, a traditional Hampton Shingle built around the turn of the century. It had sat on the beach of Amagansett when it was owned by the local Fire Department, which sold it for $5 to anyone who would move it. Unfortunately, that was not me, but two or three owners before me.

The current owners were Benjamin Bradley and his wife Sally Quinn who were planning to restore Grey Gardens, the property made notorious by the Beale sisters and their many stray cats. The Bradleys were acquiring it from the Kennedy family. Lest anyone forget, Ben Bradley, of course, was at the helm of The Washington Post when he authorized the publication of the Watergate diaries based on interviews of "Deep Throat," conducted in secret by Woodward and Bernstein, which precipitated the resignation of Richard Nixon.

The couple had used the house only once a year—during the month of August. The interiors were functional but spare and landscaping was non-existent. I almost didn't buy the house because its front had little curb appeal, but it was the interior that convinced me.

It had been opened up to combine what had been three tiny rooms into a large living space with fireplace, and a dining alcove. There were two bedrooms upstairs but a large 35x35 ft. double height and beamed master suite had been added downstairs on one side of the original structure, and a spacious and attractive kitchen on the other. Best of all, the downstairs spaces were open to each other—perfect for entertaining. The entire house was painted white including the lacquered floors, a rather revolutionary concept at the time.

It had been the vision of one previous occupant, the owner of a Manhattan art gallery who understood the magic of the white box as the canvas for your own personal choices and style. While I lived and enjoyed my house for more than 30 years, the changes to the area came fast and furiously. A magnet for the creative worlds, wave after wave of artists, writers, performers, designers of fashion and interiors, architects and musicians arrived in fast moving succession. Halston, Ralph Lauren, Calvin Klein and Donna Karan were among early arrivals but hardly the only ones from the fashion industry.

Harry Bates and Gwathmey & Siegel preceded both Richard Meier and Robert Stern in transforming the area's architecture, with each leaving his distinct design imprimatur.

Billy Joel (with former wife Christie Brinkley) and Paul McCartney whose first wife Linda was my secretary at Town & Country Magazine before they met and married, became regulars.

Chuck Scarboro, Alec Baldwin, Allen Alda and Roy Scheider became familiar faces around town especially at Nick & Tony's where soon Gwyneth Paltrow and Stephen Spielberg held regular sway. Even occasional sightings of Madonna and Streisand were reported when each rented a beachfront house for a summer.

Captains of industry and Wall Street brought their own cachet and wealth to the area, which had once been little more than a string of seaside villages surrounded by potato fields.

With this much money in sudden circulation, small stores gave way to luxury establishments such as London Jewelers, and the need for fine food was first answered by Ina Garten's Barefoot Contessa before she was followed by the Red Horse Market and later Citarella. Catering suddenly made entertaining a breeze, even for Manhattan weekenders.

When, after more than 30 years of enjoyment, I decided to let go of my house, it was one of the hardest decisions I ever made—but one I don't regret. I have come full circle. I am back to renting and unburdened by maintenance demands and responsibilities, I can continue to enjoy the area, its beauty, its excitement and the friends I have made over the years.

Whether you consider the astounding changes the Hamptons have witnessed for the better or worse, I think we can all agree on one thing: when the "100 days of hell," as the locals refer to the summer season, come to an end: This is and will remain a unique slice of paradise.

Who's Here

BY DAN RATTINER

Stuart Match Suna founded Silvercup Studios in 1982. Today it occupies nearly half a million square feet of studio space in Long Island City for television, films and the advertising and commercial industry. Touring this Studio—he's today the President of the company—took nearly an hour. There are 19 stages, a rooftop space, costume and actors' facilities, writers' rooms, stage set building rooms and so forth and so on, and it's within these walls TV shows such as 30 Rock, Ugly Betty, Mad Men and The Sopranos, and films such as Sex and the City, Julie and Julia, The Devil Wears Prada, Gangs of New York, Meet the Parents and Little Nicky are made.

"I run a hotel here," Suna told me. "We rent these spaces—some are as big as football fields—by the day or week or month, and creative work goes on."

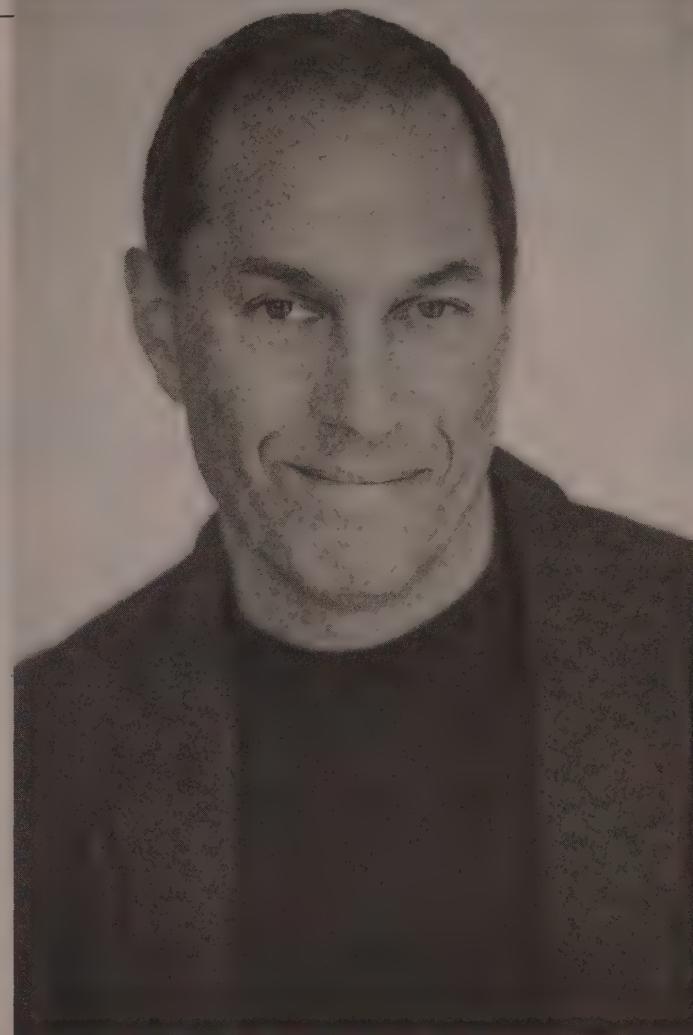

Stuart Suna was born in Manhattan in 1955, the son of a man who was in the sheet metal business. Harry Suna owned Asuna Sheet Metal near La Guardia Airport and another metal working business, Arrow Louvre and Damper, in the Bronx. He lived in Forest Hills with his wife Bernice and had two sons, Alan and Stuart. When Stuart was four, his father, prospering in the post-war building era, moved his family to a nice home in Roslyn. Alan and Stuart went to Roslyn High School.

Stuart has an interesting memory of those early days. He was in a Cub Scout troop. One day, the leader took them on an outing to what was then the Silvercup bread factory in Long Island City. It was a huge place, with great silos of flour, huge baking ovens, wrapping and packing factory floors and an indoor area where trucks could come in and, as the giant, 20-foot-tall sign on the roof read "Silvercup Bread, the World's Finest," offload the material from which it was made. It made a great impression on the young scout. At the end of that tour, management gave each of the cubs a loaf of bread.

After graduating high school, Alan went to Architectural School at Cornell and a few years later Stuart, more interested in sculpture and the arts, went to Skidmore where, after his second year, he transferred to Carnegie Mellon University in Pittsburgh. He would get two degrees, one in Architecture and the other in Fine Arts.

It was on his Christmas vacation during his last year at Carnegie Mellon, that things happened in Stuart's life that headed him off on his incredible career.

His father, at this point, took him and his brother to the Silvercup Bread Factory in Long Island City, which Stuart remembered from his Cub Scout days. The factory was shut down now, abandoned when a management and labor dispute could not be resolved. The bank, who now owned the abandoned building, wanted to sell it. And Harry wanted to buy it. Over the years, Harry's steel-making firms had worked on major projects. They had built the exterior blue panels for Shea Stadium. They had done steel work for Windows on the World, the restaurant at the top of the World Trade Center. They had done many other projects in the city as well.

During this time, Harry also saw an opportunity in buying abandoned buildings. He had bought small ones and renovated them and rented them as apartments. He had also bought buildings and fixed them up to become rentable commercial space.

Here at Silvercup, Harry was with representatives of the bank, being shown around. It was 270,000 square feet all together. Harry's idea was to bring down his Bronx factory, Arrow Louvre and Damper and his Asuna sheet metal factory near La Guardia Airport to this building, and then rent out the rest of the space.

He and his boys, one grown, the other almost, had talked this over. Perhaps it could be made into tennis courts. Perhaps it could be made into apartments. Perhaps there was something else.

Among those who Stuart talked to during that visit was the caretaker of this vast abandoned building, Joe Szabo. And Joe Szabo told him that NBC had made inquiries about buying the building to make it into TV studios. It had a great effect on Stuart Suna.

"This, I thought, was a really good use for this space," Stuart said.

Armed with this information, he talked to his father and brother and they decided to buy the building, using whatever space dad didn't need for the sheet metal business space for the entertainment business.

Suna also had a personal request. He'd be graduating shortly. Among other spaces he had seen in the building was an enormous walk-in refrigerator room—the size of a city loft—in which milk and yeast for the bread factory had been stored. He asked if he could have that as a place to live, where he could do his architectural designing and his sculptures. His father said sure.

It was several years after that Christmas that this vast building, at least part of it, was put back into service. During that time, Alan worked in an architectural office in Manhattan, and Stuart worked at the John Warnack architectural offices also in Manhattan. He worked there almost two years "at $6 an hour" he told me, living in a rental apartment on 27th Street and Third Avenue. At this point, the building in Long Island City was moving along, but still not done. Stuart felt, however, that he would like to work for his father and oversee the use of the 200,000 square feet that his father would not be taking. (Between the Sheet Metal and the Leaders and Gutters factory, Harry would need just 30,000 square feet.

In the end, Harry was only able to move his sheet metal business into the building. There were union rules in the sheet metal business. But then there were different union rules in the gutters and leaders business. The union declined to have both businesses in one building, thinking the workers might be taken advantage of. And so, what Stuart and Alan Suna were left with was not 200,000 square feet but 255,000 square feet to figure out what to do with.

Silvercup Studios opened for business, partially completed, in 1983. The great sign stayed on the roof, at least the giant, 20-foot-tall SILVERCUP part of it. The words below it, smaller, were "the world's finest," and they took these letters down and used some of them to make the word "studios" which went back up. Actually, they were able to find every letter except "u" in the (Cont'd on next page) the car "an exceptional representative" of class dining during the 1914-1940s era, kitchen, wait station and all. Before such amenities, passengers would have to leave the train to eat, ESRM president Dakin Morehouse points out.

Built as New York Central no. 450 for use on the prestigious Twentieth Century Limited, "the most famous train in the nation," the car measures 72 feet 6 inches and bore Pullman's signature green color and black roof with gold lettering, says Lawrence. It ran between New York City and Chicago with a running time of 18 hours. And get this, he adds: today's Amtrak's Lake Shore Limited does that run in 19 hours! In 1936, the car was pulled from the Century and renumbered 518, with an updated interior, including air conditioning (a luxury then), but "retained its wood windows and its characteristic 'clerestory' roof line." Except for tables and chairs, a lot's still there: buffet, pantry, the works, says Nathaniel Guest, Director of Preservation for NRHS. He raves about the car's sub-floor "profusion of pipes and gadgets and appliances," making it a "steampunk fan's dream of how to heat, cool, water, and power a luxury train car in the era before electronics."

In 1949, no. 518 was sold by New York Central to the Delaware and Hudson Railroad and again renumbered, as no. 154, and ran on D & H trains through the '50s. The car was named "The Lion Gardiner" in 1971, when it was moved to the Valley Railroad in Connecticut. By then, it had acquired a crusty, gritty exterior, and by 1976 was virtually abandoned in the woods of Essex, CT. In 1986 it wound up in Kingston, NY.

Why the name? Morehouse speculates that it may trace to a branch of the Gardiner family because the [Robert] Gardner [sic]-Denver Company, which manufactures heavy equipment, such as compressors, has a history going back to the 1850s and only a wealthy family could have started such an enterprise. In any case, Guest points out that for years New York Central did not follow the tradition of naming sleeping, lounge and dining cars, but that once The Lion Gardiner became a retired "star" in the '70s, it was given a name, bringing together various legacies: Lion Gardiner, railway dining and recent but important preservation efforts.

The Lion Gardiner dining car is thus both historical and historic, "the sole surviving example of the 1905-1925 heavyweight dining-car class in New York State." As such, it is eligible for inclusion in the National Register of Historic Places. If the car is saved because of the cooperation of public and private entities, Lawrence says it will not only add to the nation's heritage, it will serve as a fund-raising model for similar efforts. As Guest emphasizes, "The car is a record of craftsmanship and mechanical ingenuity of the sort we will not see produced again. No amount of photo documentation would take the place of the informational and cultural legacy the car embodies." Enthusiasts are invited to make a donation at esrm.com.

words "the world's finest." They had to make a matching new "U."

They had hoped to open with five studios, but on opening day, only one, Studio Five, was ready. So that was where they had their first tenant.

"A production company rented the space for a Cool Whip commercial starring Betty White," Stuart told me, remembering it all fondly.

The first movies were also shot in that studio that year. These were Woody Allen's Purple Rose of Cairo and Broadway Danny Rose. They were in business.

In 1983, still living on 27th Street, Stuart, having gotten his architectural degree, completed his apprenticeship and applied to take the test to get his architectural license.

"I went to a class given at a design center in Brooklyn to prepare for the test," Stuart said, "and there I met my future wife, Vicki. She was in the room also prepping for the test. I had at least seen her earlier. We had gone to Roslyn High School together. But I hadn't said two words to her then. It just never happened that we met. I went over and introduced myself."

Vicki and Stuart were married in 1986 and moved into 27th Street. Vicki's maiden name was Match. They agreed to both use Match as a middle name. Vicki Match Suna and Stuart Match Suna thus went out to meet the world. The following year the loft room was ready and they moved out to Long Island City.

"It was, and is, a wonderful loft space," Stuart told me. He and his wife lived there for many years. His two daughters, Zoe and Rose, were born in 1992 and 1995 while they lived there. After ten years, they bought an apartment in Manhattan and moved there. When I saw the loft on my tour, it was offices.

"The room when I first saw it had no windows," Stuart said. "It had glass block where windows were supposed to be, but they were painted black on the inside. I replaced them with double pane windows. There is the patio outside. You have views to the east, the south and the west. You can watch both sunrise and sunset. The sun streams in."

The loft ceiling is 14 feet up. For part of it, there is a balcony. Up there, Stuart did his architectural work. Under it, in an enclosed area, behind some glass block (from the former window spaces) he did his sculptures.

Over the years, Silvercup expanded. There is a Silvercup East not far away, which has a further 100,000xxx square of additional studio space. There is a planned Silvercup West, which will hopefully be built and include huge residential and office skyscrapers.

On Feeling Safe in Your Own Neighborhood

BY DAVID LION RATTNER

The other night I was out walking my dog on the street near my house. It was a nice night, I had a flashlight in my pocket but I didn't have it turned on. The night was cool, the moon was bright and the stars were out.

About ten minutes into the walk everything was going as it normally would, when suddenly I saw a guy on a bicycle ride down in the direction of my house. He was riding fast, a young guy, probably 20, and he had a flashlight on his bicycle so that he could see where he was going.

I immediately got suspicious, because the street is a dead end with my house at the end, so I couldn't imagine where this guy could be going in such a hurry. I immediately turned on my flashlight and pointed at him as I saw him get closer and closer to my house. His flashlight then started to shine around in the front yard, shooting in all directions.

I was too far away at this point to see him, even if I pointed my flashlight on him, but I walked in his direction with my flashlight shining anyway, and then I saw that he was now heading in my direction. I think my dog could sense that I was getting a little on edge. "What the hell is going on with this guy?" I thought to myself as my dog started to focus her attention directly at him.

Would I have called the police?
Would I have chased him? Would I have screamed? At the very least, it would have upset me a great deal.

When the guy on the bike started to get within shouting distance, I said, "Is everything alright with you? Do you know somebody who lives down there?" I also obnoxiously pointed my light directly at the guy's face for a moment and then moved it to where his hands were.

The first words out of his mouth could not have been more clear. In a very friendly voice he said, "I'm sorry, I didn't mean to scare you or anything. I'm on my way home and I thought that this road would cut all of the way to the other side and didn't realize it was a dead end."

Immediately, I felt safer, my mind felt clearer, and it hit me that of course this was the case. It made perfect sense.

"Oh, okay, thanks for explaining. I live down here, so it kinda freaked me out, and you were biking so fast."

"Yeah, I like to ride fast."

"It's no problem. And thanks again for letting me know what was going on—you made me nervous for a second there."

"Yeah, I would be too if I saw a guy riding around near my house at a dead end. It's no problem. Have a great night."

I started to think about how I would have handled it if the guy didn't respond to me when I asked him what he was doing and instead just took off down the street. Would I have called the police? Would I have chased him? Would I have screamed? At the very least, it would have upset me a great deal.

What would you do if an unfamiliar person was in your neighborhood?

My point is this: If you find yourself walking or biking around in the middle of the night in a neighborhood where you do not live, you're absolutely crazy if you think the people who live in that neighborhood aren't going to wonder what you're up to. They're going to be concerned, they are going to think of their safety, and they probably won't immediately trust you. And it doesn't matter who you are or what you look like. And that's anywhere, not just here in the Hamptons.

What does it take to

Determination, discipline, and the hunger to succeed. An understanding of what came before and the ability to anticipate what's coming next. The acquisition of new knowledge and the cultivation of new connections.

I Scream for Sunscreen!

BY SALLY FLYNN

Sunburn management is a critical skill for anyone who lives near a beach and is not blessed with enough melanin to fight off being pan-seared by the Summer Sun.

Sunscreen instructions get more confusing every year. Should you use SPF 15, 30 or 50? Some say reapply every four hours. Some say reapply after swimming. Some have secret ingredients in them that moisturize your skin, remove wrinkles, make cancerous moles glow in the dark, detangle your hair, freshen your breath, brighten your tattoos, fade brown spots, and can also be used to remove rust from your car.

In my experience, it doesn't matter how much I paid for the sunscreen, or whether or not I followed the instructions. If I'm out in the Summer Sun, I'm going to get burned.

Once you have a sunburn, there's a whole new area of etiquette that opens up. First, everyone is authorized to inform you that you have a bad sunburn, and then they also demand an explanation.

"Jeez, you got toasted didn't you? What happened? Were you on the beach?"

"Actually, I was at my son's game."

"Well, you should have worn sunscreen. It's not just for the beach, you know."

Some have secret ingredients that remove wrinkles, make cancerous moles glow in the dark, remove rust from your car...

"I did use sunscreen, but I got burned anyway, it happens."

"Then you didn't use one with a high enough SPF factor. You need to use SPF 50 or higher."

"Thank you. In 50 years of life I never thought of using sunscreen with a higher SPF."

"Glad to help."

People also seem to be entitled to test your pain tolerance when you have a sunburn. They squeeze your burned shoulder or slap you on the back and get a sick kick out of watching you grab a chair for support as you sink down in pain. This pain testing is most prevalent among males. Slapping a sunburned buddy on the back is some kind of weird bonding ritual men have.

The best shower in the world is the one you take when you come home from the beach. You carefully adjust the water to a cool setting, because lukewarm water will hurt. If you have a powerful shower head, you step back so the jet pulses don't hit your sunburn. You adjust the water cooler and cooler as it washes away sand, sweat and the smell of sunscreen. Afterward, you blot your body with a towel. You put on loose clothing that feels so amazingly soft on your burned skin, you could weep for joy.

You put on a little makeup, skip foundation and blush, and decide you look too good not to go out. Maybe your burn will turn tan, or maybe just fade away. Regardless, the edema from the burn has smoothed out your wrinkles, and since you can't afford botox, going out now is a good idea. Plus, you have enough color to go sleeveless. This is the good side of a sunburn, so enjoy it while you can.

As good as that first post-burn shower was, the first night of sleeping with a bad burn is pure misery. Trying to find a comfortable position takes hours. Eventually you just give up and go watch TV. Hopefully you're not too sleepy to remember not to sit on any leather furniture. If you do that, your skin bonds with the furniture and you must call a relative to peel you off the couch.

Sunburn management is an ongoing process, but that's just one of the prices of living in paradise.

Marathon Biking Adventure, SH2MTK

BY KELLY LAFFEY

For better or worse, I like to think of a Hamptons summer as a challenge. With a maximum of three months of perfect beach weather, it's very necessary to deliberately enjoy each day. I'm not a hyper-planner, but there are certain things—like a bicycle trek to Montauk or walking outside barefoot—that can only be enjoyed when the weather is warm.

The ride from Southampton to Montauk was born, as these things tend to be, out of boredom, before I owned a car. Bound by my bicycle—which I still maintain is the least frustrating way to travel around the Hamptons—I was craving a chance to get out of Southampton. In the days before iPhones became ubiquitous fixtures, my brother and I turned to handy MapQuest to figure out a route that would avoid Montauk Highway for as long as possible. The trek has become a yearly sojourn, paying homage to the beauty of the Hampy Hamps while subsequently allowing us to enjoy a few hours at The End.

Though I traveled with my iPhone on Sunday, it was strictly for musical interludes along the Napeague Stretch. The ride through the back roads has since become second nature, a delicate balance to keep the beach to your right and the highway to your left.

Sunday's sun was shining, but there was a soft, cool breeze that thankfully didn't let up. My sister and I started our excursion—29.2 miles, a little under four hours—in Southampton Village, hugging Hampton Road before meeting up with the "Cobbs"—Cobb Road and Little Cobb Road, which, not surprisingly, brings us by corn fields.

It's so rare that I associate Hamptons travel with leisure—too often I'm in a rush to get somewhere or fuming about the guy who tried to cut me off. But when you max out somewhere around 10 mph, and that's on a downhill, you're forced to simply enjoy the East End's raw nature. A favorite stop on the journey are those sights that remind you of how "small town" it really is out here. (Specifically, I recommend checking out Sagg Bridge and Main Street, Wainscott; and then trying to convince people that you're only 80 miles from New York City.)

By far the most difficult part of the trip is the Napeague Stretch. Six-or-so miles of flat Flattsburg with little in view to break up the trip. The Napeague ride is followed by a Sophie's Choice-type decision that makes you immediately regret thinking of how "hard" the Stretch is—to take Old Montauk Highway or New Montauk Highway? New Montauk offers 1.5 miles uphill followed by 1.5 miles downhill, and a decently wide shoulder. Old Montauk is all about the rolling hills, virtually no shoulder and a narrow sidewalk that sporadically begins and ends. But it's on the ocean, and we opted to go for the views this time. Cresting that final hill and seeing the hamlet nestled between Fort Pond and the Atlantic is one of the greatest feelings in the world. We coasted into the business district, immediately falling in sync with Montauk's beachy vibe.

The bike here is best served with a subsequent dip in the ocean. We casually tossed a Frisbee, grateful for its red color and float-ability, before retiring to our beach towels.

Our rest was short-lived, however, as a thick gray cloud soon began to race toward us from the north. A flash of lightning prompted us to quickly seek out a place to change into non-sweaty clothes, and the subsequent downpour forced us into the Sloppy Tuna across the street. Blissfully un-crowded, I ordered that most quintessential of beach drinks—a Corona Light with lime—and watched the teeming rain stir up the surf. Within 20 minutes, the downpour, which was much more Florida than Long Island in nature, ended, sunny skies returned, and I abandoned my beer in favor of another Montauk treat, the lobster roll. Red Hook's variety (see review on page 75) is quickly becoming my favorite, and I enjoyed it on a newly dry outdoor picnic table.

Walking around Montauk Highway, I reveled in my mini Hamptons vacation. There are few things as beautiful as a sunset over Fort Pond, and we took a much deserved, leisurely stroll to the train station, to be transported back to reality.

she oversees $3 billion worth of construction.

As for Stuart, he continued growing the Silvercup business. In 1993—he and his family had built a home in East Hampton by that time—he joined the board of the Hamptons International Film Festival at its founding. He was also its first major contributor. He is chairman of the board of the film festival today. Stuart sits on four other charitable boards today.

Among the many films and TV shows filmed at Silvercup including Adam Sandler's Big Daddy and Little Nicky, one that stands out for him was the film Highlander starring Sean Connery. In that movie, a fight scene was supposed to take place on the roof of Silvercup behind the sign and next to the building's water tower. Stuart had not seen the script. And, among other things, at that time, he was in contract to have the water tower taken down.

"When it came time for the scene, they said 'where's the water tower?' and when I told them it had been taken down they said please put it back up. I demurred. In the end, they CGI'd the water tower back. It crashes through the roof and down into the floors below during the fight. Also in this scene, someone is thrown off the roof. Of course, about four feet down over the edge there were mattresses for them to fall on, so they could climb back up to shoot it again."

Stuart remembered Woody Allen, at the completion of a scene for one of his films, being startled when Stuart opened the double doors to the outside to hear jackhammering going on in the building next door. We heard nothing! he told Suna. That's what you pay us for, Suna told Allen.

Stuart recalls that during the early years, Howard Stern rented an apartment space in the building so he could have a place to stay when he was working in the city.

"We became good friends. Still are. He's really a wonderful person, nothing at all like his radio show persona."

And Suna remembers Alec Baldwin, who he's known for a long time, recently approaching him.

"He told me he didn't want to be on the honorary board of the film festival any longer. He wanted to be on the real Board, he wanted to pay his dues, give back, and so he has. He has created a film series at the John Drew Theater, given major funding to Guild Hall, given funds to the film festival. What a wonderful man."

He recalled Christie Brinkley and Billy Joel, when they were married, making the music video "Uptown Girl" at the studio.

And then there was this scene.

"Early on, we rented a studio for a Russian TV production. The deal was that 20 Russians, would be flown from Moscow to an unknown location somewhere in the world – the plane windows would have the shades down, and then these people, blindfolded, would be taken to an unknown place where they would have to live for two weeks in a large room. There were 10 men and 10 women. Their destination was Silvercup. We set them up in a studio designed as an apartment where TV cameras could monitor every moment of their days and nights. The rules were that at the end of every day, the Russian TV audience would vote someone off. Keep in mind they didn't even know what COUNTRY they were in.

"During the second week, they were allowed out in pairs, cameras accompanying them, to have to find a way to make money to support everyone in the apartment. At that moment they knew where they were. They had done this in Germany the year before. The women had become prostitutes. I told them here they could not do that and have it filmed here. So they refrained."

"One interesting aspect of this was there was a spiral staircase that went up to the roof, and they wanted to use the roof for smoking. We built an eight foot tall wooden fence along the borders of the roof. And within those walls, they smoked."

The tour was over. I left. Outside the front door, there is a large red canvas awning just like one you might see in front of a big city hotel. It is a hotel. The Suna Hotel. The Silvercup. Welcome, sir.

Ebner's onion chest, opened

Rochester Institute of Technology, in New York, he realized that there could be "an artistic approach" to woodworking. Upon graduation, Ebner studied at London School of Furniture Design and after a two-year stint in the armed forces, he knew he wanted to pursue life as a full-time studio craftsman, moving into the red barn on Puleston's property in 1973.

Ebner is now considered to be an integral part of the "studio craft" furniture movement. His astounding 4-foot-high carved onion captures the inner layers through the wood's grain and his use of material highlights the organic curves and knots prominent in his furniture, bringing a lifelike quality to the chairs and tables. Daily-use items such as bowls, mirrors and candlesticks are elevated to artworks in his interpretation.

Curran says, "The Puleston exhibit is hung as a salon, stuffed with birds. You can almost hear them. And then you walk into the Ebner room and it's so Zen. It takes you to a completely different place. Whoosh! Both of these exhibits reflect an important aspect of the creative environmentalist right here in Suffolk County."

The Sound of Sonos

BY MATTHEW APFEL

This is the latest installment in my ongoing series about my trip to visit a friend who just moved to Silicon Valley a.k.a. "Nerd-ville." Any cross-country move is chock-full of uncertainty and emotional peril, especially for the kids. But the real angst in the home has focused on one thing only: technology.

Would Comcast of Atherton be better or worse than Cablevision of the East End? Actually, that's a trick question; even Kazakhstan has to have better cable service than Cablevision.

More importantly, would he be able to replicate his New York home audio and TV setup, without paying a fortune? The answer is an emphatic yes—thanks to a fantastic product named Sonos.

Sonos is a WiFi-based music distribution system that does zoned music the smart way. Each unit is about the size of an Apple TV or external hard drive. You connect it to your audio receiver, and very quickly you create a network of music zones that link to speakers throughout your home.

Yes, I wildly oversimplified what it takes to "connect" to your receiver, but the basic concept is very easy. Instead of hiring a team of contractors to hard-wire your home and program over a week, my audio pro was able to install the entire system in a single afternoon.

It gets better. Sonos is flexible. Want to add music to another room or to your backyard? Just add another distribution box. Planning to move in a year or two? The entire system can move with you; there's no hard-wiring and no proprietary music drive.

Let's talk about the user interface, which is absolutely essential for a good home audio system. Yes, those bulky Crestron panels of 10 years ago were easy to use. They were also very expensive. Just replacing the battery costs almost $200. Even worse: the channel layout was hard-coded and needed professional updates. Ka-ching!

With Sonos there's no remote control or hardware that can break. The control system is an app that's easily installed onto any computer, tablet or smart phone. Any device can access and broadcast music from multiple sources: a computer, your phone, hundreds of internet radio stations, and all the music streaming services such as Pandora and Sirius.

iTunes playlists transfer with ease. You can group different zones of your home together, to play kids music in the basement while you listen to the Rolling Stones in your kitchen and bedroom. You can change music groups and favorite channels in seconds, from any location in your home—no AV professional required. The system even automatically updates your music library whenever you change it in iTunes.

Let's be clear: User interface is the true game changer in technology. iPhones didn't take over the world because they were new; there were dozens of seemingly great smartphones and PDAs before them. iPhones ruled because they are incredibly simple to use. That's why Samsung and everyone else copied the icon layout—and willingly paid billions in damages when Apple sued for patent infringement. Now, almost all phones have the same basic layout.

But I digress. The point here is simple: the Sonos UI does for home audio what the iPhone did for portable devices.

What about price? A product this great must cost a fortune, right? I can't give exact numbers, because no two audio systems are the same. Let's just say that my entire Sonos system cost about the same as ONE of those plasma TVs from 10 years ago. So for those keeping score at home: better system + fewer hardware components + killer UI + no wiring + portability + exponential savings = home run.

If you're even thinking of upgrading your home audio system, I strongly recommend checking out the sound of Sonos. ■

You Are What You Eat...And What You Drive.

BY BOB GELBER

Sophia Loren, certainly one of the most voluptuous, beautiful and talented actresses to ever grace a movie screen, once said, "Everything you see I owe to spaghetti." Spoken like a true Italian beauty.

This quote started me thinking. Can a country's favorite foods have relevance to the kind of automobiles that are designed and driven there?

Italy, the land of little Fiats, Ferraris and delicate Vespas...and pasta and vino. Did the great Italian car designer Sergio Pinin Farina go home at night after a hard day's work at his design studio and lust after a hot plate of spaghetti just as Leonardo De Vinci did hundreds of years earlier? You bet he did. To a red-blooded Italian teenager, there is nothing better than driving a Vespa motor scooter as fast as humanly possible through the many narrow streets of Florence. This same teen will eventually graduate to an agile Fiat motorcar and then, if financially successful, to a Ferrari, the top of the pecking order. The good life. Fast cars, fast women and tasty food. No wonder Italian restaurants are the most popular restaurants in the world.

It has always surprised me that the biggest-selling vehicle here in America is the Ford F-150 pickup truck. The second most popular vehicle is a Chevrolet pickup. In virtually every other country in the world, no manufacturer even makes a pickup. What gives? Is it because America is the land of Big Macs, French fries and the popular Governor Chris Christie of New Jersey? Americans like living large.

The British have always called our automobiles "Yank tanks," and indeed they are, especially when compared to most of the world's automotive offerings. Americans were brought up on big cars with large V-8 engines. Nothing wrong with that, except they have a big appetite for fuel, which has gotten expensive. Americans also have a big appetite for food. I believe it was a Russian diplomat who once said that America was the only country in the world where even the poor people are overweight!

The staple of Asian food is rice. Delicate little grains that have to be gobbled up en masse to be filling. When one really thinks about it, Asian automotive products started out as delicate little products. Honda originally built little small bore motorcycles. To this day, the Asian automobile makers are famous for building jewel-like engines that are over-engineered and seem to run forever. I'm not a great fan of raw fish or shark fin soup, but food that may be a little strange to the Western world is a dietary staple to a lot of the globe. These excellent foreign cars with many strange-sounding names have become commonplace on American roads. In many ways, drivers have been taught that small and delicate can also mean tough and long-lasting.

What can one say about European cars? Just like the foods of each country, they are all so different. The French have the best reputation for fine food, but not for the best of automobiles—certainly not here in America, because there is currently not one French automotive product being imported into America. Germany is a lot like America, a meat-and-potatoes kind of place. They love their brawny 'S-Class' Mercedes Panzerwagen and Hot Rod BMWs. Why, even those old delicate little Porsches sports cars now have to share their showrooms with their sibling large SUVs and sedans. Dr. Porsche must be turning over in his grave.

Ah, England. Not exactly known as a place to find a superb meal, but certainly a place to buy a great car. All those Rovers and Rollers and Bentleys and Astons and Jaguars mucking about cannot be a bad thing.

I've heard it said that you are what you eat... and, in the Hamptons, you are what you drive. ■

New "Pet Saver" Tool Frees Dogs from Hot Cars

Graphic: Oliver Peterson

SAG HARBOR: A somewhat apocryphal story was going around last week about a Bridgehampton couple finding their dog dead after leaving it in a hot car on July 23. Whether this particular case is true or simply propaganda to send a message, it is a fact that dogs can die from heat exhaustion much more easily than people think—and there is no shortage of folks leaving their best friends in hot cars while they run important errands, like shopping for jeans or new blue tooth headsets.

People For The Ethical Treatment of Animals (PETA) explains that even on a 78-degree day, the temp in a parked car can rise to 120 degrees. "Shock sets in as the dog's internal temperature rises, and death can occur in just 15 minutes," the group says.

This behavior falls under animal cruelty laws. "It is a legitimate reason to call," a rep from Southampton Town Police said, though he noted that most people are a little too quick to pick up the phone. "Half of the time the dog in the car is gone before we get there," the officer said.

But the potential for harm exists. This week, Sag Harbor's Bark-Co Industries released the Pet Saver, a new tool for helping overheated dogs escape from their vehicular prisons. The Bark-Co Pet Saver (pictured above) makes extracting panting pets a breeze. Simply attach the included life-sized bacon decal (patent pending) on the passenger side window to draw the dog away from the driver's side, where striking should occur.

Once the offending window has been eliminated, remove the pooch inside and relocate to a safe and happy home.

Peak Viewing for Perseids Meteor Shower Is This Monday

Graphic: Oliver Peterson

EAST END: Fireworks season may be over, but East Enders can still turn to the night sky for a jaw-dropping show this week. The annual Perseids Meteor Shower is underway, and peak viewing time will occur just before dawn on Monday, August 12. The August shower is a local favorite for its consistent shooting stars and relatively warm late-night temps.

According to astrology.com, North American viewers can expect to see up to 80 shooting stars per hour at the peak, which will occur just after 4 a.m. on Monday. If cloudy skies reign, the morning of August 13 will also offer optimal viewing.

This year's show should be particularly vibrant, as the shower's peak frequency will occur under a moon-free sky. The moon will set just after 10 p.m. on August 11.

Factoid to impress your friends while stargazing:

The Perseids gets its name because the meteor shower's point of origin, or radiant, appears to lie in the Perseus constellation. In Greek mythology, Perseids is the word to describe sons of Perseus.

Merlot Alliance Names Wölffer Winemaker Roman Roth as President

EAST END: Members of the former Long Island Merlot Alliance—now Merliance—have voted winemaker and founding member Roman Roth, also a partner (since February 2013) and technical director at Sagaponack's Wölffer Estate Vineyard, as their new president last week. Roth was one of several officers appointed to hold positions for two-year terms within the organization. These newly elected leaders will serve through June 2015.

"Merliance has come a long way since we started in 2005," Roth said in a statement, adding, "With collective reviews of our merlots and merlot-based blends in national publications, annual consultations with international oenologists and elegant wine-focused events like Harvest East End to our credit, we are spreading the word that Long Island is home to world-class wines, and that merlot is king among them. I am proud to work alongside some of our region's top quality producers to keep this drumbeat going."

Raphael winemaker (since April 2013) Anthony Nappa was elected as Merliance's new vice president, and Clovis Point managing partner and owner Hal Ginsburg is staying on as treasurer for an additional year, extending his first two-year term. Winemaking consultant Gilles Martin will remain as the organization's technical advisor, which is not an elected position.

Founded in 2005, Merliance is an alliance of Long Island producers of quality merlot and merlot-based blends.

Montauk Tourneys Featured on NBC Sports' "Shark Hunters"

The remaining four episodes of this six-part documentary series will air Wednesdays at 10 p.m. on NBCSN through the month of August. Three Northeast shark tournaments will be featured in total, including the Star Island tournament in episodes one and two, the 43rd Annual Montauk Marine Basin Shark Tournament in episodes three and four, and the 27th Annual Monster Shark Tournament in Martha's Vineyard, Massachusetts in episodes five and six.

Five captains, including local boy Anthony Giorgio, battle rough conditions, the sharks and each other to land the biggest shark in the six episodes.

Farmer Hops at Chance to Localize Craft Beer

BY DAN KOONTZ

The East End's passion for locally produced wine is now long established—it's a love affair that's inextricable from the peaceful vistas provided by the vineyards that dot the North and South Forks. What could be a prettier sight than fields of ripening grapes that will eventually produce world-class wine?

How about fields of ripening hops? That's right, hops, one of the crucial ingredients in that other great thirst-quencher known as beer. (According to standard definitions, beer must contain water, malted barley or wheat and hops.) A number of craft breweries have sprung up across Long Island in the past few years, and they're making some very decent beer. This is locally produced beer, but locavore sticklers would point out that so far, mostly only the water has been truly local. But that's changing.

Which brings us to Condzilla Farms in Wading River, a family farm where John Condzilla has started Condzilla Hops. An avid homebrewer and craft beer enthusiast, Condzilla saw an opportunity to provide local breweries with a local source of a key ingredient.

"We provide fresh dried hops directly to the breweries, which allows them to use the hops at their peak," explains Condzilla. "If they get their dried hops from distant sources, they might not be as fresh, which means their flavor might have weakened."

And what is the flavor of hops? That depends somewhat on the particular variety—Condzilla grows Cascade and Mt. Hood hops—but, in general, hops are what give beer its bite. The bitterness and other complex flavors and aromas imparted by the hops serve to balance out the bready sweetness of the malted barley. In recent years, American craft brewers have taken to "hopping" their beers much more heavily than in the past, and have also experimented with "wet hopping"—that is, adding undried, just-harvested hops, which is only possible if you have a local hop farm.

"Last year, I partnered with Port Jeff Brewing Company to provide wet hops for their Wet Hop Ale, and we're going to do that again this year," says Condzilla. "That's another niche we can fill."

Right now, Condzilla has 1,000 hop plants, but he is in the process of expanding the acreage devoted to hops. The tall rows of hop plants, waving in the breeze, must make for an unaccustomed sight for the motorists passing on 25A. Imagine their curiosity if they were to catch a glimpse of Condzilla's most recent acquisition: that is, the German-made hop harvester, a construction of Rube Goldberg-level intricacy that is especially designed to strip the ripened hops from the hop plants.

"We've dubbed it 'Beer Loves Company + Hops,'" says Condzilla of the fascinating machine, adding, "We had a Kickstarter campaign to raise funds to buy it, and the top donor got naming rights." According to Condzilla, the machine can cleanly strip the hops from 170 hop plants per hour, while a human worker requires a full hour to strip a single plant. With 1,000 plants to strip, yielding an anticipated 1,500 pounds of hops, it's pretty clear why Condzilla needed the hop harvester!

Condzilla Farms has been in the family for over 100 years, and has gone through various changes: it started as a dairy operation, then became a potato farm, and now is a truck farm growing asparagus, raspberries and strawberries. Condzilla's father works the land as well, and is naturally an enthusiastic supporter of Condzilla Hops.

All around the Condzillas are former farms that have been turned into housing developments and strip malls, which serve as a reminder of how difficult it is to keep farming in the face of development.

Certainly, beyond the fact that the local wine is quite good, the East End's support of our local wine is partially tied to our awareness that the vineyards are helping to preserve an agricultural heritage and a rural character that is threatened by encroaching development. Wouldn't it be great if the same were true of local beer? Condzilla Hops is one of two hops growers in Suffolk County. Now all we need is for someone to start growing barley!

Experimental Filmmaker Explores Surf Culture

BY SANDRA HALE SCHULMAN

A new surf shop is set to open in Amagansett Square next week with more than just wetsuits, they'll also have an art gallery and film screenings.

Last summer Montauk artist/filmmaker Tin Ojeda screened his first film, Kook Paradise, outdoors to a rabid, enthusiastic audience in Montauk. Now his newest film, Daughter The Movie will have its East End premiere outside Chris Gentile's Pilgrim Surf & Supply in Amagansett Square on August 17. Pilgrim is an offshoot of the Brooklyn location that carries top name boards, wetsuits and clothing.

"I began painting in the early 2000s, as well as screen printing and photography," Ojeda says. "There were several films that I had planned to release, but never finished any of them until Kook Paradise last summer. But Daughter is the first film that I finished on my own and am really proud of."

The film is actual film, not digital, and Ojeda, originally from Argentina, has been collecting vintage cameras, lenses, and editing equipment for several years. He works out of his renovated garage in Ditch Plains, where he also makes T-shirts for his handmade DMA T-shirt line.

"I'm inspired by early experimental black and white films by artists like Man Ray, as well as the early pioneering surf films of the '60s and '70s by filmmakers like Bud Brown, Paul Witzig and George Greenough. And also by independent filmmakers like Jim Jarmusch."

Ojeda's Kook Paradise was filmed retro-style, like newsreels from the '60s and '70s. It showed weekend surf warriors doing bizarre warm-ups exercises, wearing odd surf outfits and having trouble even getting to the water.

"The movie was an immature satire on Ditch Plains," says Ojeda. "Frustrated by the summer crowds, the attempt was to tease the surfers that take it too seriously and also to bring attention to certain characters who make Ditch what it is. It was in a couple film festivals and did really well. Most people thought it was funny, but others did not think it was so gentle. The new film is completely different. First off, it's not all about surfing. It's a mix of my video art installations and classic surfing. It doesn't really have a plot. It features some of the best surfers and waves in the world. We traveled to California twice and filmed here in New York and New Jersey. I just screened it at SMASH Film Festival in New York, the turnout was really great and it seemed like people really enjoyed it. Pilgrim Surf Shop has a small gallery where I will be showing art with my friend Rob Kulisek for the month of August. My work will feature film stills as well as large format pictures that I made while filming Daughter."

Artist Tim Ojeda

Having lived in Montauk for several years, Ojeda has watched the summer scene and crowds swell larger than the waves.

"It's overgrown. Period," he says with a sigh.

Despite the crowds, the popularity of surfing is undeniable for weekend warriors and locals alike. Pilgrim Surf & Supply is tapping into the East End's surf mania after outfitting Brooklyn and city dudes and dudettes for a few years now. They've been named one of the top five surf shops in America by GQ magazine.

Pilgrim's surf style lends itself to retro looks—clothes, hats and even boards that look like they've been in the water more than a few times and also echo prints and logos from the '50s and '60s. No one wants to look like they're too new at the game, and "surfing" has become more of a lifestyle and look than just a sport.

Lobster Lovin' at Gurney's Inn

BY KELLY LAFFEY AND STEPHANIE DE TROY

I've coined a new term: Daycation—The act of escaping reality for just a few hours. That's exactly what a Wednesday in Montauk is like. The 40-minute ride from Southampton is devoid of the typical eastbound bumper-to-bumper. The air, the sand, the breeze, the parking situation—it's all different on The End.

We arrived in Montauk at 5 p.m., giving us ample time to enjoy the hamlet before our Gurney's Oceanfront Lobster Bake obligation. A beach stroll with some refreshments from the popular Montauk Ice Co. food truck was in order before hitting the Surf Lodge to catch a few songs and a sunset with the Nancy Atlas Band. Dan's writer Dan Koontz was on keyboard, and does he know how to jam...

You know life is good when you complain about leaving The Surf Lodge to go to a lobster bake. But regrets were soon forgotten, absorbed by "ohhs" and "ahhs" at the thought of mimicking a wedding reception underway at the famed Inn. Girl talk is best served on a cliff with an ocean view.

Steff and I had to wait a bit for our outdoor table, but a wait at Gurney's isn't your typical crammed-in-a-singular-vestibule experience. Full of character, the Inn is blissfully chock full of interesting nooks and crannies. We settled on an outdoor spot overlooking the ocean, mesmerized by the perfect barrel of each wave, before wandering back into the inside bar. Bartender Kenny told us that years ago, a Dan's Papers writer went on a mission to find the best mojito in Montauk, and he eventually settled on the one Kenny created.

Sheer lobster delight!

K. Laffey

The minty drink is one to be tried at a later date, as we were soon shown to our table. Gurney's extensive list of local wine called, and we both chose the Lieb Cellars Pinot Blanc. Few wines go better with seafood. We both agreed that the wait was well worth it, as the view from Gurney's outdoor deck never gets old.

The lobster bake is set up buffet-style with plenty of options, even for a land lubber. I approached the lobster chef—I'm not sure if that's his official title—as he plucked one from its temporary seaweed bed, expertly cutting the claws and tail to allow for easy access to the savory meat. I then perused the other offerings, piling my plate with mussels, salad, corn-on-the-cob and red potatoes.

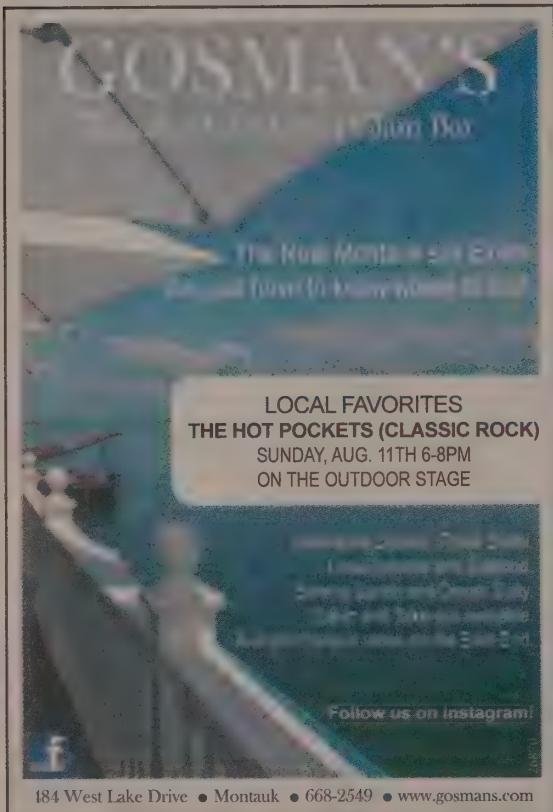

You know life is good when you complain about leaving The Surf Lodge to go to a lobster bake at Gurney's.

Comfortably seated with my lobster in the foreground and the ocean just beyond, I approached something bordering on sheer delight. I cracked into the lobster and ate it as it should be eaten—with my hands. With just a hint of butter, all it needed was a little lemon to achieve lobster perfection. The white wine and garlic mussels, too, received rave reviews, though the corn was a little too buttery for my taste.

Spotting swordfish amongst the buffet "extras," Steff decided to forgo the lobster and enjoyed a plate of the savory, steak-like fish along with a heaping of mixed greens and a few chilled shrimp with cocktail sauce. The grilled swordfish was not overdone, as it often is elsewhere, and was so flavorful that just a squeeze of lemon did the trick. The mesclun greens were fresh and delicately dressed in vinaigrette and the in-shell shrimp were crisp and firm. Remarking that her plate was "the perfect summer dinner," she nonetheless couldn't resist a taste of my lobster claw. Wide eyes said it all.

Everything tastes better outdoors—and better still when it's seafood in a fishing village. Throw in ocean views, a glass of crisp white wine and Calypso on the steel drums and it's hard to beat a Lobster Bake at Gurney's. We'll be making this a Wednesday night tradition!

Sweet Treat Born in MTK, Served With Lobster

BY KELLY LAFFEY

Sweet'tauk's Facebook page has a unique twist on the "When life gives you lemons..." saying.

“When life gives you Summer, sip Sweet’tauk.”

I've long been sold on heading to Montauk for the perfect daycation escape, especially on a Wednesday when the traffic is somewhat manageable. I set out last week to sample the ultimate summer partnership—and a small slice of Americana—Sweet'tauk lemonade and a lobster roll from the Red Hook Lobster Pound. The two became roommates in the Etna Street storefront this past May.

I walked into the casual eatery on a perfect summer day, happy to see picnic tables out front and a staff member painting signs for an actual, soon-to-be-completed lemonade stand out back. This is Sweet'tauk's first storefront, but its third summer on the East End. Owner Deborah Aiza makes all the lemonade, which is naturally sweetened with agave, herself. Varieties include the standard "oh my meyer," made with Meyer lemons; as well as unique combos like "raspberry hibiscus" and "strawberry mint." All Sweet 'tauk lemonades are refreshing, a difficult balance to achieve when so many other lemonade varieties are overrun with too-sugary aftertastes. They range in sweetness factor, with something like the "blueberry lavender" coming up on the high end and the "watermelon cucumber," my favorite, slightly more tart. Coming soon—late summer flavors include a Peach Thai Basil and a Cantaloupe Verbena.

My watermelon cucumber was best served with a lobster roll. Or several.

I'd been itching to try a roll from the Red Hook Lobster Pound ever since it was rated the No. 1 food truck in the country by The Daily Meal last spring. The award was bestowed just months after Superstorm Sandy hit, annihilating the now-reopened truck as it sat in its namesake Red Hook, Brooklyn location.

A fan of the street meat, my previous truck tasting high clocked in at No. 13—I've sampled the pulled pork waffle from Waffles & Dinges. Though I love all things Southern, on a hot summer day, a lobster roll is just the ticket.

Red Hook serves lobster rolls every-which style: Get 'em the Maine way—topped with a touch of homemade mayo; Connecticut style—hot and buttery; or Tuscan style—tossed in a basil vinaigrette. For the especially health-conscious, there's also the option of a "Bikini roll" where the lobster is served with your choice of mayo or basil vinaigrette on a bed of bib lettuce.

Red Hook sources its meat from Maine lobster fisheries, all of which have been certified as a sustainable fishery by the Marine Stewardship Council, and the reason is obvious—there's simply no need to douse the crustacean with anything but a touch of insert preferred method of enjoying lobster here.

The Maine roll was a classic as they come. The lightly buttered (on the outside, giving the sandwich a nice structure) NE hot dog bun is a nice complement to the hunks of lobster nestled inside on a lettuce leaf. With a lemon-based mayo and minced celery, the true flavor of the savory meat is comes out.

This was my first foray into a Tuscan Style lobster roll, and the result was a satisfying blend very fitting for the anti-mayo sect. Again, the meat is just lightly tossed in the basil vinaigrette, giving the lobster a fresh bite that makes you question if "Brooklyn, Maine"—as in the outdoor sign "The Best Lobster Roll South of Brooklyn, Me."—is a state in the Mediterranean.

In addition to the lobster rolls, we sampled the shrimp roll, the "off the hook dog" and the lobster mac & cheese. The dog, made with all-natural Berkshire pork and bacon, received rave reviews from my dining partner-in-crime, but I found the combo a little too sausage-esque for my taste. Lobster

Mac & cheese is the way to go for those days when the ocean breeze is just a little too chilling. Made with four cheeses and plenty of lobster meat, it hits the spot without being overly filling.

All sandwiches are served with North Fork Potato Chips and a Brooklyn Brine Classic Dill Pickle. The chips are always a favorite, but the pickle... Sweet, with a nice bite to it.

The storefront is also the first place to serve scoops of Joe & Liza's ice cream, outside of its Bay Burger (Sag Harbor) home base. I opted to end my meal with one of Sweet'tauk's icy treats instead—Deborah makes a variety of ice pops in unique flavors, which include "Rhubarb Creamsicle," "Yellow Watermelon Basil" and "Bee Naked Blueberries." My fennel and grapefruit creation had a little bit of spice. The perfect beach-cap to allow me to finish my daycation with a walk to a slice of Montauk sand.

Skyscrapers Land in Southampton

BY STEPHANIE DE TROY

Taking a space anywhere but on Main Street or Jobs Lane, in Southampton that is, might seem like a risk for an art gallery—but after a visit to the new Keszler Gallery Annex on North Sea Road, just south of Montauk Highway, it was clear why owner Stephan Keszler would choose the location. The building, a former power plant, offers sky-high ceilings—suitable for large-scale artworks that could not otherwise fit—and massive garage-like doors that allow what's inside the gallery (like that winking lenticular photograph I Love You by Derrick Santini) to be visible from the street. Old brick walls, painted white, and exposed overhead beams give the gallery a certain industrial, edgy rawness while sleek, modern and minimal gallery furniture let you know that Keszler is really all about Contemporary Art. Currently on view, and visible from outside (anyone who's been stuck at that red light on their way to Schmidt's or Lynch's will have seen it) are works by Alexandre Arrechea, who represented Cuba during the 54th Venice Biennale in 2011. The 15-foot-high curvilinear steel sculptures set on the grassy hill, Helmsely, 2013, and Empire State, 2012-2013, are modifications of the New York City skyscrapers, shrunk in size and altered to the extent that their tops are no longer pointing upward—Empire State is coiled up like a snail shell while Helmsely makes a giant ring. Turned inward, could this be a commentary on the current state of the city? The series, entitled "No Limits," lends itself to a wealth of interpretations—no limits on the artist's ambition to create, no limits to the self-handed bonuses within the financial sector.

Alexandre Arrechea at Keszler Annex

Both works on view outside of Keszler Annex were part of the Park Avenue Project, presented by Magnan Metz Gallery, in partnership with the city's Department of Parks and Recreation and the Fund for the Park Avenue Sculpture Committee, where they were seen from March through early June of this year by New Yorkers making their daily commute up and down Park Ave. Featured on the cover of Time Out New York, as part of their "Amazing Outdoor Art" issue (April 25-May 1, 2013), Empire State is photographed as it stood in early spring, on the Park Avenue median surrounded by mathematically planted tulips and taxi cabs. It's strikingly amusing to note the difference surrounding scale makes in the overall impression of Arrechea's sculpture. In Manhattan, surrounded by skyscrapers, Empire State and other works from the "No Limits" series seem large. Here in Southampton, they seem massive.

Inside the Annex, more examples from "No Limits" are on view, along with watercolors and works on paper relating to the series, should a collector wish to partake in the series on a smaller scale. An adjoining room features artwork by Keszler mainstay artists—fashion photographer Marco Giaviano's supermodels, skateboards with designs by Damien Hirst and Murakami, Bert Stern's Marilyn portraits and Russell Young's iconic screenprints, to name a few. Impressive and strikingly beautiful works by Zhuang Hong Y—made of rice paper flowers and paint on canvas—make use of the gallery's high ceilings and wide space as they extend not only upward and outward but also towards the viewer in their sculptural relief. Banksy's Wet Dog, 2007, the original, unique street work, will bid you adieu on your way out; the lasting imprint beckoning a second visit.

The current show at Keszler Annex will be on view through Labor Day. Keszler Gallery is located at 200 North Sea Road, Southampton. For more information, call 212-774-1906 or visit keszlergallery.com.

Ille Arts: Portraits by Jack Ceglic

BY MARION WOLBERG-WEISS

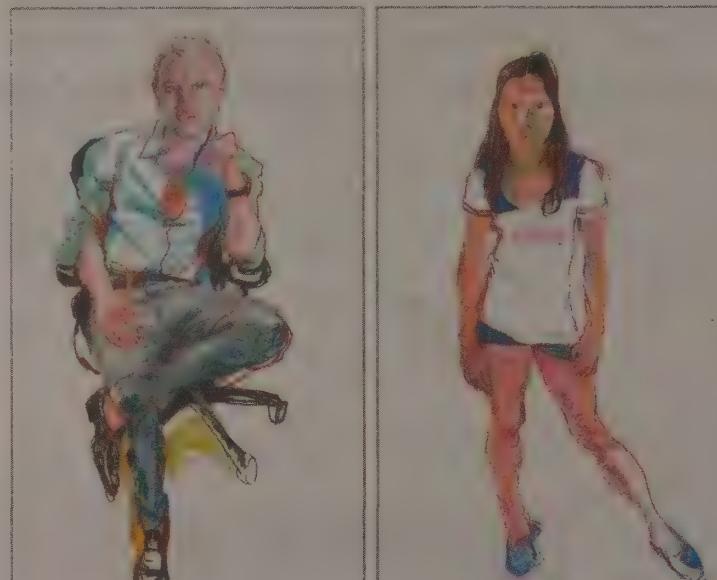

The new portrait exhibit by Jack Ceglic at Amagansett's Ille Art is an interesting one. The reasons are subtle and require careful observation. Moreover, it's important to know that the artist is involved in other art endeavors, including architecture and home furnishings.

Additionally, Ceglic started Dean & DeLuca (the "primary foodie haven") along with his partner. Even so, can we possibly compare all his interests and find common bonds? We think we can. First, Ceglic's focus on diverse textures is common with his products at Dean & DeLuca; his East Hampton home and interior furniture also provide a variety of styles and textures, including works designed by Eero Saarinen. Materials, like Victorian wicker and those included in an antique Louis XVI armchair, also evoke myriad senses. The point is this: There's an arresting articulation of aesthetic qualities at work in Ceglic's living space.

The same could apply to Ceglic's present portraits. On the surface, the full-length figures seem filled with energy and vitality, a variety of men and women, young and old, affluent and not so affluent. But another look shows other traits that give the images more definition: their state-of-mind and world view, for example. The positioning of their arms, legs and even shoes add to their personal attributes and gives additional credence to the artist's articulation.

Consider that small things mean a lot in the artist's execution. There's an image of a woman who appears "normal" at first glance, but then we notice that her pursed, seems ready to jog around the block. She's aggressive, sure of herself and someone who will be successful in life. Then there's an older man, bald and standing sideways, who is not looking straight into the viewer's eyes like the other figures. One hand is in his pocket, a sign of being comfortable, too, but he also appears stern and not entirely satisfied with his life. A woman with her hair in a bun and wearing long pants stands with two arms on her hips, a sure sign of her no-nonsense attitude.

Such specific descriptions of the artist's figures demonstrate that non-verbal elements are important: clothing, posture, stance, eye contact, gestures. (Some other non-verbal aspects certainly play a part in Ceglic's home furnishings, too, like material and color.) This art critic believes that non-verbal qualities in portraits make or break the work. Embroidery pieces by Christa Maiwald also use texture, facial expressions and posture to create defining moments in the life of Maiwald's subjects. The same is true for Ceglic.

Jack Ceglic's portraits will be on view at Ille Arts in Amagansett, 216A Main Street, until Aug. 19, 2013; 631-905-9894, illearts.com.

CORRECTION: The work shown in the July 19 Art Commentary at the LongHouse Reserve was not that of Jack Youngerman.

Have a Theatrical Summer in NYC

BY LEE MEYER

There's a great selection of theater outings in the Hamptons each summer (Bay Street, Gateway, Guild Hall, Suffolk, WHBPAC...the list goes on!) but some vacationers don't realize that Manhattan is just one train ride away—what better day trip is there than going into Manhattan for dinner and a show? If you're wondering which show to see, there's a great website called summerinny.com that has information and tickets for six of Broadway's hottest hits. Check out these six unique and fun shows and make sure to catch at least one of them this summer!

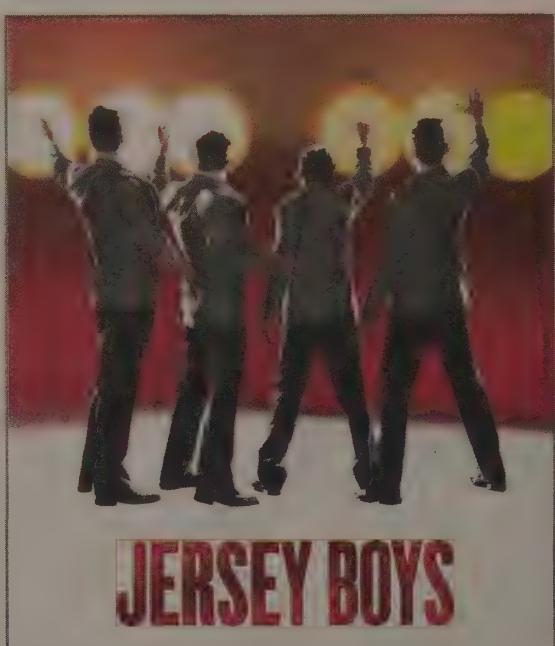

Spider-Man: Turn Off the Dark

Spider-Man: Turn Off the Dark is a sweeping, visually stunning musical adaptation of one of Marvel Comics' most beloved superheroes. For the uninitiated, Spider-Man is the story of Peter Parker, a geeky teenager who lives with his Aunt May and Uncle Ben in Queens and leads an unremarkable life until one fateful day when he is bitten by a radioactive spider while on a school field trip to a science lab and develops the ability to create spider webs, crawl on walls and more. It sounds like silly kid stuff, but the story takes several dramatic turns and Spider-Man emerges as a hero who understands that "with great power comes great responsibility." Featuring music by Bono and the Edge, this show's a great experience for the family.

Jersey Boys

A sold-out smash since winning the 2006 Tony Award for Best Musical, Jersey Boys is the true story of Frankie Valli & The Four Seasons. The show features some of the best music from Frankie Valli & The Four Seasons—like "Sherry," "Big Girls Don't Cry," "Dawn" and "My Eyes Adored You"—to help tell the story of the young, talented and troubled musical group. A guaranteed crowd pleaser, this show is great for the whole family.

JERSEY BOYS

See it this summer in New York!

First Date

A great show for couples, singles and everyone in-between, this new musical comedy stars TV stars Zachary Levy (Chuck) and Krysta Rodriguez (Smash) as two people meeting on a blind date that gets increasingly wackier and funnier as the evening wears on. As the other patrons of the restaurant transform into supportive friends, jealous and vengeful exes, meddling parents and more, the audience will be in stitches. Rodriguez recently co-starred with Katharine McPhee in Smash on NBC, so if you enjoyed her beautiful singing voice on that show, now's your chance to see her live!

Let It Be

Billed as "The concert the world wanted to see. The experience you'll always remember," Let It Be hits Broadway after a successful run on London's West End. This concert-like experience features 40 of the Beatles' greatest hits, from "Twist and Shout" to "She Loves You" to "Yesterday" to the titular song. As the audience is taken through the Beatles' meteoric rise and eventual fall, fans of the greatest rock 'n' roll band in history will no doubt love this fantastic tribute.

The Trip to Bountiful

The riveting and heartfelt drama The Trip to Bountiful, starring Vanessa Williams, Cuba Gooding Jr. and Cicely Tyson—who won a Tony for her performance—tells the story of Carrie Watts, an aging woman living in Houston with her son and daughter-in-law, who wishes she could return to her hometown of Bountiful. When she decides to take her latest pension check and hit the road, the results are joyous and moving. Don't miss this beautiful play!

Rock of Ages

This fantastic tribute to the '80s, which was adapted into a film starring Tom Cruise, tells the story of a "small-town girl living in a lonely world" and a "city boy born and raised in South Detroit" who meet by chance in L.A. and fall in love while trying to hit it big. Featuring 28 awesome songs like "We Built This City," "The Final Countdown," "Wanted Dead or Alive," "Can't Fight this Feeling" and, of course, "Don't Stop Believing," the whole family will love this lively, funny and romantic musical.

For more information on these shows and for tickets, go to Summer In NYC's website at summerinny.com, where you can also sign up for more information about future offers. Check out the site and hit the Great White Way!

Ask Bob Explores Humanity Through Animals

BY JOAN BAUM

Ask Bob (Henry Holt) will be a bit of a surprise (and maybe a slight disappointment) to Peter Gethers fans who know his captivating nonfiction trilogy romps around the globe with his late, beloved cat Norton (who lived with the author in Sag Harbor). A screenwriter, playwright, book publisher, film and TV producer (and co-creator of the off-Broadway hit Old Jews Telling Jokes), Gethers has now turned his attention to the novel. Bob Heller works devotedly in The West Village, giving care and comfort to all manner of pets—"cats, dogs, horses, birds, snakes, turtles, frogs, fish, snails [!],

"Savoring happiness is something our pets learn how to do very early on, so I'm not sure why it's such a hard concept for us humans."

small pigs, and many varieties of rodents." He also writes a weekly column, "Ask Dr. Bob," called "The Vetting Zoo," where he dispenses advice in the form of Q&As. Intelligent, kind, sensitive, full of gentle humor and common sense, he's almost too good to be true, and there's the rub: the "almost" is almost too much. When he gets married, his father tells him that "having a child's not like having a dog." It takes a while for Bob to appreciate the larger fact: that loving another person is not like loving a dog. Still, Bob's heart is always in the right place, even if his behavior sometimes goes astray.

Ask Bob is full of good sentiment. As Bob puts it in his farewell column, after 15 years (it's the last line of the book), "Savoring happiness is something our pets learn how to do very early on, so I'm not sure why it's such a hard concept for us humans to grasp. But it's worth grasping." Earlier, he observes, "With animals, you feed them, house them, pet them, and when needed, you take away their pain—and for that they trust and love you. It should be that simple with humans, but of course it isn't. We try to make it that simple, but it never is." But, of course, such a generous soul is going to succeed, get the girl and expand the business. The acerbic Dr. Marjorie Paws, whose practice he inherits (a third of her customers are lesbian cat owners), sees at once his straight-arrow, compassionate ways and brings him onboard. In other words, the conflicts that should drive the narrative don't seem persuasive enough. Despite owning up to his foibles and despite heartbreak and aggravation, Bob is never less than fully attentive to his animal kingdom. He's a mensch from the start, so there's little in the way of character development.

The plot is a series of chance occurrences, but the timing of critical events and pivotal moments, romantic and familial, seems arbitrary. People show up, people disappear and reappear. The Q&As don't advance the plot or seem integral to what goes on in the chapters they head. Nor do the occasional stories of clients and their pets, as heartwarming and informative as they are, relate to the narrative at the point of their inclusion. Some sections, especially about Bob's family, go on some, his angry father, his passive mother (who comes into her own after her husband dies) and Bob's manipulative older brother, Ted. The extensive space given over to his dysfunctional family and to the even more dysfunctional families of the two women he loves, is meant to explain Bob's fear of emotional commitment, but the reader never doubts that Bob will do the right thing.

He may be flawed—he says so himself—and he feels unworthy of the women he loves but they're lucky to have him. Who else would put up for so long with the likes of Ted, a handsome, egomaniacal, slick-talking narcissist with an unending capacity for cruelty (why so much attention to him?). How could anyone not root, with confidence, for a man who's opened his home to his personal menagerie? And how could any pet lover not be charmed and guided by the Q&As?

Peter Gethers will be signing books at Book Hampton in East Hampton on August 8 at 7 p.m. and at Book Hampton in Mattituck Thurs. August 15 at 7 p.m.

Southampton Arts Festival Returns

BY LEE MEYER

An international music festival featuring renowned musicians and artists, as well as student prodigies, the Southampton Arts Festival features an extensive offering of performances and programs designed to enrich and entertain audiences of all ages. The Festival, founded by pianist Elena Baksh and violinist Dmitri Berlinsky, returns for its fourth season on August 16, running through August 25. This year's honorary artistic advisor is storied musician Evgeny Kissin. It's the Festival's goal to combine world-class performances with an extensive educational program, creating an ideal environment for sharing ideas and talents and bridge the gap between classical music and other art forms. The Parrish Art Museum will host the Festival's opening and closing performances and galas.

"All the concerts are going to be exciting, but I think we're really looking forward to our opening night at the new venue at the Parrish Museum," says Berlinsky, "[there will be] Bach concertos with International Chamber Soloists, string orchestra with two violin soloists...we really hope it will bring lots of different audiences who are music and art lovers, and also people who just want to enjoy a beautiful setting and a glass of wine outside." Berlinsky hopes that the Southampton Arts Festival continues to move in the direction of other popular summer festivals. "It can really bring to the Hamptons a wonderful tradition, like Tanglewood, Aspen and other major summer festivals." Berlinsky will perform at the opening with Mikhail Bezverkhny, a violinist,

A beauty of a space for the arts

violist, teacher and composer who has been named laureate of several international music competitions.

On Sunday, August 18, the Festival will present "Love in Music and Poetry," which will combine classical music from Bach, Chopin and others with Russian love poems by Alexander Pushkin, Vladimir Mayakovsky, Mikhail Lermontov, Marina Tsvetaeva and others. Julien Lowenfield, an internationally renowned poet and playwright, has translated the poems into English; Lowenfield has received much critical acclaim for his translation of the work of Alexander Pushkin. Poems will be recited in both Russian and English. "The combination of music and poetry will create a unique experience for the audience," says Baksh. "The poems will be woven together with the music in such a way as to heighten the audience's enjoyment of both, while telling a story of longing, love, and inspiration." Baksh will be on piano, Berlinsky and Bezverkhny on violin, and Andrey Tchekmazov, an internationally recognized soloist and chamber musician, on cello. The performance will take place at the Southampton Cultural Center.

On Monday, August 19, the Festival's Young Artist Showcase will play at the Basilica Parish of the Sacred Hearts of Jesus and Mary. Talented young performers will perform with some of the Festival's distinguished musicians and artists. Other performances include chamber music performed at the Grace Auditorium in the Cold Spring Harbor Laboratory on Friday, August 23 and the closing performance at Parrish Art Museum featuring the Franck piano quintet and a virtuoso showcase of piano, violin and cello. There's also a, members-only event on Saturday, August 17.

The Festival will also raise awareness for "Child Prodigy and Autism" research. The research was originally conducted by Ohio State University Professor Joann Ruthzatz in collaboration with James D. Watson, a Nobel Prize-winning molecular biologist and zoologist most famous for the discovery and scientific breakthrough of the Nucleic acid double helix. The research suggests that child prodigies may hold the key to understanding what causes autism and could potentially lead to finding a cure. The Festival wishes to support the ongoing research because several of the young people who have provided data to the study are believed by Festival supporters and benefactors to be "key to the future of classical music, young prodigy musicians." Watson and his wife, Elizabeth, are among the supporters.

With a variety of talented performers and several different concerts, the Southampton Arts Festival is set to be one of the most exciting summer events Southampton has to offer. For more information and tickets for any of the events at Southampton Cultural Center, call 631-287-4377 or go to southamptonculturalcenter.org. For tickets for other events call 917-520-0611 or go to southamptonartsfestival.org.

Fun and Enrichment at Yaphank County Farm

BY KATARINA BARONE

Summer is here and the possibilities for enjoying the day are endless. Children take advantage of the sun and the time off from school, excited for each new adventure.

The Yaphank County Farm is an incredible place to visit with your family during the summer and a unique experience for everyone. As you walk in, you're surrounded by animals, activities and employees who are passionate about helping you and your children learn all about the fundamentals of agriculture. It's important for children to have the chance to experience first-hand elements of a farm to gain valuable insight. The fully functioning farm has been located in Yaphank for more than 100 years, and is now supported and maintained by the Cornell Cooperative Extension of Suffolk County.

The Cornell Cooperative Extension aids in the research and development of agriculture, as well as marine and nature programs specifically designed around the needs of Long Island. With proper research and scientific developments regarding farming and wildlife on Long Island, we can sustain and protect resources and ecosystems in danger. This knowledge is priceless for children to learn and educators are there at every step explaining the function of each aspect of the farm.

Of course, the most endearing part of the farm begins with meeting the animals. The farm is home to goats, sheep, llamas, pigs, chickens, peacocks and more! You will be mesmerized by the cute creatures, which aren't only there because they're adorable. Visiting the farm is an amazing opportunity to show your children the advantages that animals bring to the human race. Kids are able to touch and feed the animals as they travel throughout the different areas of the farm and participate in activities along the way.

"Fleece and Fiber" is a learning experience geared towards educating children about sheep's wool. They will get to see the creative process from the sheep to the sweater and understand the steps taken to "borrow" their coats for the winter. Shaving the sheep, teasing the wool, carding and weaving the wool into fabric so that a sweater can be made is demonstrated at the station. Using animals for dairy is also an important station at the farm where children are introduced to goats and cows and the life-size model cow, Cornelia. Here they can learn techniques for milking a cow by using Cornelia.

For the summer, the Butterfly House is open to mesmerize all who step inside. Filled with local plants and local butterflies it's a micro-ecosystem demonstrating the dynamics between the insect and the environment. It's intriguing to learn the influences each has on the positive well being of the other's existence. Butterflies are extremely beneficial to plants. Plants are a crucial resource for the life of the butterfly. Each stage of life, from caterpillar to fluttering butterfly, is displayed and children will be able to understand the transformation of the majestic insect. As well as butterflies, the importance of honeybees is also seen while taking a moment to visit the observational beehive. Honeybees are endangered. Here you can witness the bees at work and learn how they serve such a deep purpose on this planet and how to help protect them.

Natural sustainability on the farm would never be possible without the desire to remain green and recycle, recycle, recycle! "Green Footprints" is a great way for children to learn about "thinking global, and acting local." Learning about effective ways to reduce their carbon footprints as they grow up and gain awareness on issues regarding pollution, they are enlightened about the power they have to help the world around them.

The Yaphank County Farm is not only a farm with some local goats and pigs, but an experience filled with insight and knowledge of the importance of sustainable farms, ecosystems and the world around us. Each visitor gains a deep appreciation and understanding of the effects of natural farming, changing their perspective on Long Island farms forever. Families enjoy the outdoors together being entertained by the exuberance of the employees and, of course, the spunky farm animals trotting around. It's surely a summer day to remember.

We're The Millers

Perhaps the violence and mayhem of smuggling drugs from Mexico to the U.S. shouldn't really be treated as a joke. On the other hand, you can either laugh or cry, and We're The Millers goes for the laughs. Small-time pot dealer David Burke (Jason Sudeikis) gets into a bind with his supplier, and the only way out is to go south of the border to bring back a really big stash of weed. David recruits stripper Rose O'Malley (Jennifer Aniston) plus two problematic teenagers to pose as a family to present an innocent front at the border, gets an RV, and off they go. As in the Vacation films, most of the fun is getting there—the humor arises from loony situations the "Millers" encounter along the way. Whether the film will have anything important to say about the brokenness of U.S. drug policy remains to be seen.

Planes

It was only a matter of time, after the release of Cars, before Disney would hit on the idea of making Planes. One smallish problem that probably won't be noticed by the pint-sized folk who will dominate audiences for Planes, and yet may subconsciously sap their enthusiasm for it: that is, planes don't really look like people. Whereas cars do kind of have faces, with headlight eyes and radiator grills for mouths, and thus make for expressive, differentiated cartoon characters with easy-to-read personalities, planes are comparatively faceless and inscrutable. People talk about cute cars or sexy cars, but seldom use the same language for planes. As if to compensate for this problem, the filmmakers have given the anthropomorphized planes in Planes all manner of foreign accents, to help us tell them apart. I suspect it will be to little avail. Planes cannot possibly work as well as Cars did.

Elysium

Elysium is a rather heavy-handed allegory about extremes of wealth and poverty, and the lengths to which the rich will go to protect their privileges. In 2159, as the story goes, the rich have sequestered themselves in a luxurious, idyllic space station (called Elysium, of course), while the wretched poor are stuck on earth without recourse to medicine or social help of any kind. And, of course, the rich on Elysium refuse to allow "immigration." Heavy!

I Give It A Year

A British comedy about a happy couple, Josh and Nat (Nat's a woman, by the way), who decide to do that thing that has the bad reputation of ruining perfectly good relationships: that is, they decide to get married. Said to be the funniest British movie in years.

Hamptons Drive-In: Nostalgia in Your Backyard

BY ROBERT OTTONE

I was five years old when I last saw a movie at a drive-in on Long Island—Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade, back in 1989—starring Harrison Ford and Sean Connery. I remember sitting in the back seat of my parents' station wagon and watching as Connery and Ford took down Nazis while searching for the Holy Grail. Sadly, drive-in movie theaters are a thing of the past, the last one on Long Island came down in 1998, and the lot was paved over and turned into a wholesale club.

Zac Allentuck, founder and director of Hamptons Drive-In (along with his wife, Cindy), brings a little bit of that drive-in magic back to movie fans by offering outdoor, drive-in style exhibition to the East End. Started in 2007, the company uses a variety of screens to showcase films. While researching the company, I must admit, I got excited seeing that Hamptons Drive-In will be presenting Superman, starring Christopher Reeve, at the East Hampton Food Pantry on August 21. The week before, they'll be presenting Tim Burton's Batman, arguably one of the greatest superhero movies ever produced, also at the East Hampton Food Pantry.

"We have four different screen sizes available, three of which are inflatable," Allentuck said. The screens vary in size from 10 feet wide to over two stories tall. "They're all for outdoor use and presentation, as well."

At the end of each screening, folks are asking when we can schedule another, which, of course, makes us feel good, you know?

I was curious how Allentuck and his company translates the magic of watching a film in a drive-in to a modern audience. Kids who are glued to their iPhones surely have no concept of how awesome the drive-in experience is. "What we're trying to do is find a permanent location where we can exhibit films," Allentuck said. "We're doing a lot of our fundraising and a lot of our screenings out on lawns. Like, for instance, we showed The Sound of Music at the Mulford Farm. When we do a "drive-in," it's typically a parking lot location and we broadcast via FM frequency to the cars."

"How do we get the people involved in the drive-in experience? Well, it's really up to the people," Allentuck said. "The folks who are promoting the event typically take the responsibility to let people know the format of the event, as well as what's being screened. We'd like to find a home, whether it's an old parking lot, showing movies on a Monday through Thursday basis throughout the season. That's our goal."

I admitted my excitement over the possibility of seeing Superman on the big screen to Allentuck and he laughed, saying, "We're really excited this year, even though we have nothing to do with the film selection, we're really just the ones who bring in the screen, set up the popcorn and the client typically selects the film," Allentuck said. "We help with promotion and help solicit the businesses who wish to sponsor the event. Showing movies like E.T. at Herrick Park is a real honor, though. There's been nothing there, other than the Artists & Writers Charity Softball Game, until now. It's a major coup for us and we're excited to be there."

"We typically wrap things up around Halloween," Allentuck said, talking about the typical Hamptons Drive-In season. "At a certain point, it gets too cold to stay outside, but we can typically get an image on the screen 20 minutes or so after sundown. Like, right now, we get dark around eight-ish, so, as it gets darker, we can start earlier, but of course, it's colder."

I was curious what the strangest movie Hamptons Drive-In ever exhibited was. I envisioned some East End VIP screening Nosferatu or The Wicker Man for himself in his backyard. The answer wasn't as creepy. "The Big Lebowski," Allentuck said. "That's one of our favorites. We've screened Across the Universe, Blazing Saddles, Young Frankenstein, mostly mainstream stuff for the crowds. I never get people saying that they had a bad time. At the end of each screening, folks are asking when we can schedule another screening, which, of course, makes us feel good, you know?"

Plan a Day Trip to Fire Island

BY LEE MEYER

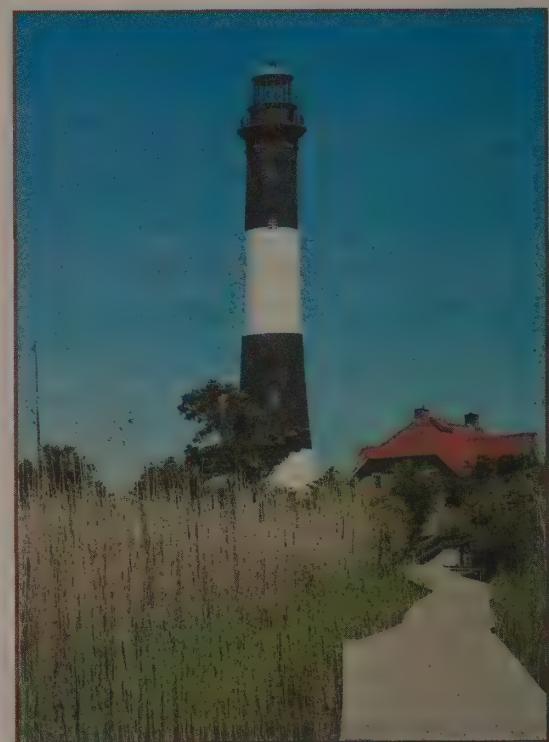

I was so tempted to start this article with "Have a GAY old time on Fire Island," but I figured that would be too cliché. But it's true—not only is Fire Island the best gay resort spot on Long Island, it's also a genuine good time for friends and couples, gay or straight. The summer is without a doubt the best time to head to the island, and there are still some great events and plenty of places to check out as we head into September and October.

There are two "gay" communities on Fire Island: Cherry Grove, and the Pines. Of the two, I personally prefer Cherry Grove; it has a more laidback atmosphere and is generally less crowded on weekends. But both areas are filled with bars and dance clubs, some restaurants, beautiful beaches, live entertainment, hotels and inns, even available

Long Island. The small population allows for the Island to have a unique culture, though. There are no cars on Fire Island; travel to the island is by ferry or water taxi. Ferries to Cherry Grove and the Pines are available from Sayville, and during the summer months they go back and forth every hour.

The ferry, which has indoor and outdoor seating and allows pets (within reason), takes a little more than a half hour to get from Sayville to Fire Island. You'll notice the rainbow flag greeting you as you approach the Cherry Grove dock, and when you get off the ferry you'll likely be struck by how beautiful the area is. Without cars and other vehicles, there's just something peaceful about the island. The first thing I usually do with my Gentleman Friend (or whoever I'm with) is head for the beach—the water is usually sparkling and there's always a spot to sit down and relax in the sun. You can rent umbrellas, chairs and other beach accessories if you'd rather not lug equipment on the ferry.

One of the beautiful sights of the island

There are a ton of clubs and bars to check out while you're on the Island. The Ice Palace has nightly events, from drag shows to celeb appearances and is part of the Grove Hotel. Cherry's On the Bay is also great for slick cocktails and music. For some snack food, I recommend Cherry Grove Pizza for their Bacon Cheeseburger Pizza. I would travel to the Island all year-round for this pizza if I could! If you're more interested in the Pines, check out the Pavilion Nightclub, which reopened this year; the Pool Deck and Bar; and the Blue Whale, which also has brunch and fine dining.

One of the biggest upcoming events on Fire Island is the Miss Fire Island Pageant—tickets just went on sale for the 48th Annual Miss Fire Island Contest on Saturday, September 7 at the Grove Hotel. The popular event is a massive drag queen competition that attracts visitors from all walks of life. There's also a "Coronation Ball" on Sunday, September 8, a show featuring the winners of the Contest. A highly recommended event, I'd advise to buy tickets ahead of time.

For more information on Cherry Grove including listings and events, check out cherrygrove.com. For more information on the Pines, check out thepinesfireisland.com. For tickets and more info on the Miss Fire Island Contest, go to missfireisland.com.

End-of-Summer Shopping Spree

BY STEPHANIE DE TROY

With the first week of August there comes a bittersweet feeling that the last month of summer is upon us. Years of childhood summer vacation have us all spoiled for good—there will simply never be that many days in a row of total free-roaming freedom, entire days spent bodysurfing at the ocean followed by games of manhunt in the woods behind the backyard, only to wake up and do it all again the next day. Even after the parental-enforced summer job years come about, we take for granted our limited investment in our employers. Never a night was spent tossing and turning over P&L's after dishing out ice cream sundaes at Scoop du Jour in East Hampton.

For fashionistas there is a silver lining—it's called summer sales! All of those shoes and dresses you've been drooling over are now marked down at nearly every shop on the main streets from Westhampton Beach to Montauk. Feeling better? I know I was after leaving Jildor with a new pair of Sam Edelman pink patent leather flats, high-heeled Jack Rogers and Diane Von Furstenberg flip-flops! Take a peek at the boots brought in for fall, which could easily pair with a summer dress for now. Jildor, 30 Jobs Lane, Southampton. 631-283-2450, jildorshoes.com.

After Jildor, make sure you take a peek down that little brick alleyway for treasures from the sought-after Quemar candles. What makes Quemar candles so unique is that they are made of wax but hollow inside, making room for a little tea light of your choice to sit balanced in the sand inside—resulting in an unparalleled glow. If you haven't been in the store, you may have already seen Quemar candles at one of the many Hamptons' summer galas, like the Chef & Champagne party at Wölffer or the Pink Apron benefit at Southampton Hospital. My orange one brings harmony and understated elegance to the dinner table each night. Quemar, 28D Jobs Lane, Southampton. Call 631-488-4888 or visit quemarcandles.com. Here's one more to check out while you're cruising Jobs Lane: Thirty 3 South. This eclectic store is a fusion of modern home accents and antique, one-of-a-kind collectibles. Owners Dan Cellucci, local artist, and Ana Robar, design consultant, have an eye for key pieces that bring the wow factor into any home, stop in at Thirty 3 South, 87 Jobs Lane, Southampton or give them a ring at 631-377-1928. Meanwhile, in East Hampton, get some instant style at FabInjection—the Hamptons' only full service wardrobe salon! The FabInjection experience includes by-appointment sales, exclusive trunk shows, personal styling and other VIP services. The cozy space is tucked away on the second floor of 2 Newtown Lane at the corner of Main Street in the very heart of East Hampton. Let Carmen Adriana guide you to your best look yet! Call 631-604-5059 or visit fabinjection.com.

New Kid: Christopher Fischer Baby debuts pop-up store at Christopher Fischer Southampton. Each piece offered at the pop-up shop can be purchased for children ranging from newborns to age five. The Christopher Fischer Southampton pop-up shop is open daily and will be available now through Labor Day, so hurry! Favorites like chevron dresses for girls and knit cardigans for boys.

The Fall 2013 collection features crew neck sweaters with owls, foxes, hedgehogs and more. Fur vests and jackets. Onia Swimmers Takes Off

BY SHARON FEIEREISEN

Founded by two longtime friends, Carl Cunow and Nathan Romano, Onia is quickly becoming one of the country's leading luxury swimwear brands. Stocked at East End fashion meccas including Scoop and Theory, we spoke with the fashion entrepreneurs behind the burgeoning label.

Can you tell us a little bit about your background in the fashion industry?

We both grew up in the garment business—Carl more on the production side and I was always more in marketing and sales. Instead of going to college I packed up and moved to China to work for a trading company in Shanghai. I wanted to learn the ins and outs of what it takes to make a product and it was a great opportunity for me to do just that. Carl worked at Steven Alan on the development and production end with men's shirts.

How did you guys meet and decide to work together?

We met in high school. While I was working at Steven Alan, I saw a void in the contemporary market for swimwear that was well made with a focus on high quality fabrics and trims. Similarly, Nathan noticed a void in the non-surf luxury market. There was a big influx of surf brands hitting the market and there was a big influx of European brands, but there was nothing in between.

Who do you see as your core customer?

We're both New Yorkers and design with the New Yorker in mind. Our guy is a traveler. He's always on the go and so he needs something that's as high quality as it is versatile. Our customer might be out shopping and then decide he wants to jump in the pool—our swim trunks work seamlessly for both.

Where did the name come from?

Onia means boat in Hebrew. My wife was the one who came up with it. We were on the beach in Tel Aviv and she saw a far out boat; I texted Nathan and the rest is history.

What do you think sets your brand apart from other high-end swimwear labels?

Functionality—our pieces are impeccably constructed. The quality of our fabrics and trims and the way we sew all of our pieces is far beyond your everyday swim trunks. If you took our pieces apart, you'd see that they are sewn like high-end trousers. There are so many components that go into making each and every one of our pieces. We work with dozens of factories around the world that specialize in various components so as to ensure we are using the best of the best.

Are you influenced by fashion trends?

We look at what's out there, but more so than fashion trends we're influenced by technology. We're constantly striving to find the latest fabric innovations. We see our pieces as lasting well beyond a single season.

Any swimwear pet peeves?

Logos all over.

What's the hardest part about heading up a very fast growing fashion business?

Finding the right people to work with. It's very important to only work with people that understand your brand and your vision.

Why do you think your pieces are so popular in the Hamptons?

We're a brand built around the on-the-go New Yorker and given that many of them summer in the Hamptons it makes sense that we're well represented out East at stores like Theory, Surf Lodge, Scoop and Steven Alan. We're actually planning on capitalizing on our popularity by opening a pop-up next summer. We're in the process of scouting locations.

What's in store for 2014?

2014 Onia is going global. We'll be expanding into new markets including Japan and Australia. We're also re-launching our shoes, towels, and carrying cases. In keeping with the running aesthetic of Onia's trunks our shoes are designed for cross purpose; they're water resistant—they're made using leftover fabric from our swimwear—

The guys behind Onia

but wearable on the fashion conscious streets of New York City. Similarly our towels can be used for both drying off and lounging since they're made from a quick drying poly-nylon on one side and a 100% lightweight terry on the other.

Courtesy Onia
Is women's wear a possibility?

It's definitely of interest in the near future.

Any tips for guys when they're shopping for swimwear?

Recognize what the purpose of the suit is. Are you surfing? Longing? Jet-setting? ☀

Twenty Tees Take Tops to a Whole New Level

BY SHARON FEIEREISEN

If you've walked into the Southampton or East Hampton Intermix recently, you've likely noticed Twenty Tees images splashed across the walls and mannequins draped in the contemporary brand's designs. Founded by David Helwani—the man behind LaPina by David Helwani, a line of sophisticated after dark dresses—Twenty Tees has quickly risen to become one of the East End's most beloved fashion brands. Consistently a top seller in trendsetting boutiques, we spoke with Helwani to find out more about his background and why he thinks his brands are so successful.

What made you decide to start Twenty Tees?

I come from a family with a steep tradition in the fashion business. We have a vertically integrated mill, Tricots Liesse, based in Montreal, which has been at the forefront of designer and contemporary sportswear for the last 30 years. Twenty Tees came about as a North American answer to all the great knit tee lines that were being produced in Europe with elevated fabrics and an overall higher level of sophistication.

What made you start LaPina by David Helwani?

The LaPina by David Helwani concept developed out of conversations with some of our key vendors; they felt there was a void in their "going out" or

Stylin' all summer long

Courtesy Twenty Tees

sexier dress category. They loved our day-to-night dresses and felt that with our manufacturing capability and specialization in luxury that this could be a no brainer for our company. From there we developed the main concept of LaPina—dresses with designer level construction, sold at ready-to-wear prices, that women can get excited to wear whether they're going out with girlfriends or going on a date.

How did your designs and lookbook images end up so prominently featured in Intermix stores?

We definitely see Intermix as one of our key partners and we work very closely with their sportswear buying team. We were notified that the perforated tank was shot for their company Spring 2013 lookbook, but had no idea it would be a key marketing image for them in advertisements and wall posters for their stores all throughout the country. That was their choice, and we are completely appreciative.

Your pieces are top sellers in the Hamptons. Why do you think they consistently sell so well?

I think Twenty Tees and the Hamptons go hand-in-hand for many reasons. I use the words effortless, cool, edgy and luxurious to define our collection and all those adjectives can easily be adopted when describing the Hamptons. Whether we're talking about our amazing jersey fabrications in exotic cashmere/modal or linen blends or the amazingly soft sweater knit or terrys, our pieces consistently sell well in the Hamptons because of their ease of use and flexibility.

Can you single out some items you consider must haves for summer 2013 in the Hamptons?

Our perforated and mesh tops. They're great for a day at the pool or beach and you can easily dress them up for a night out. Our "Perfect" modal jersey and rib tee are also essential to anyone's wardrobe. Crop tops have been popping up quite a bit this summer and I predict they'll be a staple for most lines next spring.

You collaborated with The Surf Lodge to design and manufacture their branded line. How did that come about?

The Surf Lodge was looking to begin a branded push in the apparel business and we're known as knit experts, especially in the upper tier of sportswear. It seemed that their vision of a luxurious tee line meshed seamlessly with our core competency.

What can we expect from both of your lines for Spring 2014?

I always get very excited before our spring season's unveiling since we originally began as a warm weather brand. We're introducing new perfect tees and tanks and some incredibly innovative new meshs, jerseys and speckled fabrics that were developed exclusively for the line. At this point in our brand's timeline, we have come to be perceived as industry leaders on fabrication and trends so our team takes this on as a challenge to keep pushing ourselves to turn the otherwise expected into something completely fresh and surprising.

Nutrition Advice From Kerri Glassman

BY SHARON FEIEREISEN

A regular on the Today Show, Dr. Oz, and countless other television programs, Keri Glassman is one of the country's leading health experts. We chat with the renowned author about juicing, dieting mistakes and more.

How do you stay in shape when you're out East? Any favorite places to workout?

I love exercising outdoors as much as possible! I especially love SUP and kayaking. I love running too and it's so beautiful to run on the back roads and the beach.

What are some of the biggest mistakes people make when they're trying to eat healthy?

Skipping breakfast and giving into labels: Just eat food—real food! When people are trying to eat healthy or “diet,” they often fall prey to all those terms on labels. For example, eating “reduced fat” peanut butter is like eating reduced vitamin broccoli! Peanut butter should have all its fat, and if it’s reduced fat, it’s more processed and loaded with additional sugar and other unhealthy ingredients. Another one is overeating after a workout because “you deserve it after that workout.” The truth is you can eat the calories burned in that entire spin class in four bites of a cheesecake!

Courtesy Keri Glassman

Health expert Keri Glassman

The buzz on dairy right now is that it's an inflammatory and countless diets tell people to avoid it. What's your take on that?

If you've never had a problem with it, you probably don't need to avoid it. There are so many milk alternatives, so if you choose to avoid it just find a replacement. Yogurt, however, I am a big fan of, and unless there is specific reason you are avoiding—some find that eating any dairy causes gas and abdominal bloating and cramps and/or exacerbates sinus conditions and eczema. I recommend keeping it in your diet. Plain low or full fat yogurt is a great way to get in calcium and protein. At the same time, I recommend making your diet high in anti-inflammatory foods such as berries, greens, and healthy fats such as avocados and nuts.

What's your take on getting your fruits and vegetables via juice at a place like Organic Avenue versus eating them?

I like people to incorporate greens juices into their diet, but don't make them your entire diet and don't just ADD them onto your diet. What I mean is if you miss that salad at lunch then getting a green juice with nuts for a snack is a great and convenient way to get your greens in, but if you eat that turkey sandwich you normally have with a glass of water and add in a fruit juice you're probably consuming extra calories that you didn't need.

What are some of your favorite package snacks?

Popcorn Indian Fit Popcorn, SeaSnax seaweed, packaged nuts like Eden Organic, Chia Co. Chia Pods, Krave Jerky, Mary's Gone Crackers Sticks and Twigs, Justin's Nut Butter packets, and Wholly Guacamole packs.

What's your go-to healthy cocktail?

Tequila on the rocks with three limes, or if making the cocktails myself, I love to brew a pitcher of green tea and pop it in the fridge to chill overnight. When it's time for happy hour, I fill a pint glass halfway with ice. Over the ice, I pour 1oz. saki and then fill it to the rim with the green tea. I finish by garnishing it with a twist of lemon.

Any tips for dealing with guilty food pleasure cravings?

Find replacements foods that still hit the spot! For something sweet I recommend frozen grapes or 1oz dark chocolate. For something salty I recommend olives or salted roasted nuts. Air popped popcorn with Parmesan cheese or roasted chickpeas with sea salt work if you're craving something crunchy. Don't eat around the craving—if you really want to indulge do so in what I call a conscious manner. It also important to remember to eat enough protein to help keep you satisfied without being hungry right after a meal. Often people that skimp on their protein through the day have bigger cravings at night. Lastly, drink enough—it's easy to mistake thirst for hunger.

Hampton Designer Showcase Brings Out the Best

BY TAMARA MATTHEWS-STEVESON

It was a balmy, summer night for the opening of the 13th Annual Hampton Designer Showhouse on Brick Kiln Road in Bridgehampton. I arrived at the press preview and opening gala of this year's showhouse to catch the designers arranging the very final details before welcoming a large, celebratory crowd. The magazines, sponsors, designers and craftsmen worked tirelessly day and night to showcase a beautiful home complete with a luxurious home theater, a finely decorated patio and pool area and well-appointed "cook's" kitchen. This year's home feels cozy and warm and, to me, the design scheme flows well from room to room giving the feeling of an inhabited home with a cohesive plan. The colors are plentiful, there's apple green and soft teal blue interspersed with plenty of neutral colors and textures. Many of the designers show how to use wallpaper in a modern, fresh approach, and I was particularly struck with the detailed textiles and upholstery throughout all the rooms.

This year's home highlighted many local designers and artisans. I was impressed with wallpaper from Jack Lenor Larsen's collection in Keith Baltimore's Front Bedroom, inspired by Larsen's East Hampton Longhouse Reserve, where nature is the highlight.

Look for Baltimore's brand new summer pop-up shop in Sag Harbor at 11 Bridge Street in Sag Harbor and included in Ken and Grace Kelly's Kitchen Design Center where there are already outdoor furniture and custom kitchen displays showcased. Other local designers showed their custom work such as Bakes and Company in the state-of-the-art kitchen utilizing their custom kitchen hardware collection and a lovely combination of materials from quartz to high-end appliances. Patricia Fisher and Barbara Page are two Southampton designers bringing talent to the house this year in the Keeping Room and Back Bedroom. Fisher arranged an array of beautiful textiles including a custom-designed rug from Doris Leslie Blau. Page's upstairs Back Bedroom was inspired by her teen daughter's youthful style and the fresh taffeta pink curtains add a nice colorful element to a calm, serene space. Many of the designers used local showrooms such as Mecox Gardens and English Country Antiques to accessorize their spaces.

There's no shortage of world-class design brands involved as well. The apple green dining room created by the design team for Lillian August makes a fabulous first impression. World renowned Pearson Furniture had their textile and furniture collection prominently displayed and creatively arranged by Sherrill Canet in the Family Room, and as always the Pearson Collection just keeps getting better and better. Interior designer Celerie Kemble created an awe-inspiring Master Bedroom and sitting area utilizing her finely tuned eye to create a neutral bedroom with lots of exquisite touches. She painted the atrium in the bedroom's sitting area a soft teal blue that works well with the exquisite touches in the space. Kemble's furniture collection from Maitland Smith and Henredon are shown in the bedroom, along with her fabric and wallpaper collections from F. Schumacher.

The outdoor area feels lived-in, not brand new, and there's a good mixture of furniture shown, from Gloster chaise lounges to Ballard Design accessories and lanterns. The back porch designed by Bryant Kelly makes for a perfect respite after a busy afternoon in the Hamptons, and offers a shady spot to read a book or sip a sweet tea on the gorgeous antique teak furniture and Scalamandre fabric collections.

All in all this year's home is one of my favorite Hampton Designer Showhouses yet, and with many of the designers on the same aesthetic page the house has a nice flow. There are several new sponsors this year, and the enthusiasm and community participation is a testament to the area's love and fascination with interior design and philanthropy.

The Hampton Designer Showhouse is open through September 2. Visit hamptondesignershowhouse.com.

WHAT TO DO

New England Thinstones Add Character

BY ROBERT OTTONE

New England Thinstones is a company that manufactures and cuts stone harvested from the mountains, field and quarries of New England for the sole purpose of enhancing the beauty of one's home. The stones themselves are used to provide a personalized and interesting touch to exterior gardens, walkways and paths and have even been used for the facades of homes. New England Thinstones has recently begun working on the East End of Long Island in order to provide their impressive product for luxurious Hamptons homes.

Michelle Morgado, a representative with New England Thinstones, took some time to chat about the product, the company and how the process works. "Real stone used to be so expensive, so people were using this concrete type of stone. The reason real stone was so expensive was because it was veneered and cut by hand, until we started taking stone and cutting it and applying it to different surfaces," Morgado said.

"You can completely transform a room in 24 hours," she added.

The way the process was explained to me sounded simple enough. The stones are cut in such a way that, by providing various colors and veneers to customers, the pieces fit together almost like a puzzle. The customer can choose to assemble the pieces however they like, using whatever kind of pattern they envision, because the stones are almost seamlessly placed together. "We do all the cutting in Connecticut, we have a small stone yard in Fairfield," Morgado said.

The process is remarkably quick from placing an order to installation. "Four to five days is our average to cut it and have it delivered," Morgado said. "From there, depending on the mason and planning, it'll take the mason about a week or two to fully install an exterior. A fireplace or wall, something that's prepared, could be done in a weekend. If you know how to tile, you can easily use our stone."

Simplicity and rapid installation should come as a welcomed concept on the East End, as home remodeling and projects that drag on are typically a nightmare. With New England Thinstones' product, the process seems streamlined tremendously. "This used to be a very expensive, very costly product, but now because we've been able to utilize stronger, thinner stone, we can get the product to an architect faster," Morgado said. "It's definitely a quick-fix with a high-end look to it. It's not a shortcut, you're not lessening the value of your home, it's actually adding value because it's real stone."

New England Thinstones offers a wide variety of products from the rounded, mountainous look of Berkshire stones to the slightly more traditional Oxford Blend. The company also maintains a large inventory in order to satisfy the demand of their clients. They even offer a "green" shipping option for those looking to leave a lessened carbon footprint by offering shipment in sturdy green plastic totes that can be used over and over.

Some of the stones used have been aged over 200 years, while others have been carved and shaped by Connecticut's rolling shores. "We do a lot of face-to-faces with our dealers and clients, in order to provide better service," Morgado said. "We just do a little bit better customer service and maintain control over our sourcing and inventory. We take the time to make sure we're getting the best stone possible."

"We have about 18 different kinds of stone with around four cuts per stone," Morgado said. "We did a home in Bridgehampton, a pretty bit project, so we're using a lot of different types of stone on that project, it's really exciting. We've had entire homes built with our product. It's really impressive. We've been met on the East End with a great, positive response. I'm constantly getting calls for estimates, it's been great."

Some people perceive thin stones as not being as "good" as the "real thing." In the end, the only thing that's really different is how much weight is being added to the home. New England Thinstones sells a product that looks fantastic, is easy to install and is versatile to any client's specifications. "You're getting more for your money, local companies are saving on freight, it's a greener option, so the East End has been very receptive," Morgado said.

Restaurant Review: Delmonico's Southampton

BY ERIC FEIL

The history of Delmonico's is one filled with firsts: first restaurant in America with a printed menu, first where guests got their own tables, first where those tables were covered with tablecloths, and its downtown Manhattan location was the first dining establishment in the U.S. to actually be called a restaurant. That's pedigree.

Having taken over the former Savanna's spot at 268 Elm this June, Delmonico's Southampton Est. 1837 infuses this legacy with a chic Hamptons breeziness, one that escalates as you walk out back to dine al fresco. Still, serious carnivorous hangs in the air. Executive Chef Billy Oliva has created a menu to bring East End local to the fore, with playful choices (like a bite-size Crispy Pork Belly BLT), plenty of seafood-centric touches and, yes, steak. But we'll get to that. You're in the Hamptons, what's your rush?

A bowlful of summertime arrives in the guise of a salad comprising Maple Brook Farms Burratta, La Quercia prosciutto, Wild Rocket and charred Long Island peaches; the cheese airy yet creamy, the ham a perfectly cured counter, the fruit a sweet aside. Crab Cake Eggs Benedict is an addictive nod toward Delmonico's Eggs Benedict 1860s origins, offers a meaty crab cake with quail egg and a light, chili-dashed take on Hollandaise, plus a sliver of pork belly that makes you feel as if you're in on the real porcine secret while bacon gets all the hype. The Aquerello Risotto comes with a tableside legend about how every grain of the fabled rice is hand-polished. Such stories are the stuff of foodie fantasies, but so is this night's eloquent mix of shiitake mushrooms, truffles, corn and micro basil grown in the restaurant's Chefs Garden, mere steps from the table.

Local is as local does, and the Gosman's lobster does it right. Now, there is a time and place for working away at your own lobster with bibbed perseverance, but this is not that time nor place. Shelled and plated in simple style, the crustacean arrived naked as a William S. Burroughs lunch. A dip into sides of drawn butter or Newburg sauce (Lobster Newburg is another Delmonico's invention) is a fine touch, but the subtle sea-saltiness of unadorned lobster meat is a treat to be savored.

Then there's the steak. Oh, the steak. The filet mignon medium rare, as per the chef's recommendation, is the kind of "cut it with a butter knife" tender you read about but may rarely find. The 40 Day Dry-Aged Bone-In Ribeye, ordered rare, is rich and textured, intensity evolving as you proceed from edge to bone, a cut so close to charred perfection as to make you seriously consider whether you've been ruined for all other steaks.

Of course, no self-respecting steak eater, would dive in sans sides, and Delmonico's wants you to respect yourself in the morning. A steakhouse staple is elevated with bacon-and-shallot-enhanced creamed spinach. Hand-cut fries are a fun, finger-food way to maintain the meat-and-potatoes protocol. The biggest surprise is the pitch-perfect mix of local corn, roasted shiitake mushrooms and basil, which has become the restaurant's most popular side dish.

Local lobster. 'Nuff said!

At this point, anything short of a sweet finish is not an option. A carnival of blueberry ice cream, brown butter cake, merengue and macerated peaches is colorful and cool, while the decadent chocolate tart with peanut butter ice cream ends an argument as to whether pairing PB and cocoa is divinely inspired. And what would dessert be without Baked Alaska? After all, Delmonico's gave the French classic its name back in the 1860s after the U.S. purchased the Alaska Territory. A forkful is like biting into a cloud, if said cloud is an ethereal lemony-raspberry whisp.

An Altaneve Prosecco is raised in a toast to meals just finished and future. Yes, the history of Delmonico's is one filled with firsts. Its first Hamptons outpost is poised to make history of its own.

This Week We're Going Greek

BY SILVIA LEHRER

Andrew Zimmern, the guy "who isn't afraid to eat (almost) anything" was the honored guest at Chefs and Champagne, the 2013 annual James Beard Foundation's lavish tasting party on the beautiful grounds of Wölffer Estate Vineyard in Sagaponack. Andrew Zimmern is a an award winning TV personality, chef, author and teacher. He urged his audience "to be a traveler, not a tourist, to try new things, meet new people and look beyond what's right in front of you." His winning smile and bright personality was infectious for the happy gathering under the big tent.

The host of chefs helped raise funds for the Beard Foundation's mission to nurture and preserve America's diverse culinary heritage and to educate our future chefs and winemakers through the Christian Wölffer scholarship awards. Since 1991, the Foundation has awarded over $4 million in financial aid, with scholarships awarded each year. The talented chefs, from New York City, New Jersey, Connecticut and the North and South Forks, created a sensation with their beguiling offerings for the cheering crowd.

Here is a brief outline of some of the delicious tastes of the evening. Crudo of fluke prevailed, with different garnishes, Swedish salmon tartar with salmon caviar and onion emulsion, grilled Montauk pearl oysters with summer vegetables and champagne vinegar, yellow tomato gazpacho with shrimp avocado garnish, Asian tuna trio, sweet corn with lobster and epazote, smoked duck with wild greens and blackberry vinaigrette, vanilla ice cream with bourbon butterscotch sauce, grilled skewered flat iron steak and haloumi cheese and peach, raspberry, lemon thyme melba. The former two recipes featured below are adapted to make them kitchen-friendly.

Wölffer Estate wines were poured, as was Champagne Charles de Cazanove, Brut NV.

James Beard, a cookbook author and teacher with an encyclopedic knowledge of food who died in 1985, was a champion of American cuisine. He helped educate, nurture and mentor generations of professional chefs and food enthusiasts, and through the Beard Foundation his legacy continues.

FLAT IRON STEAK SKEWERS WITH HALOUMI CHEESE

Executive Chef Shane McBride of Balthazar in New York City, kept a constant flow of crispy cubed grilled skewered steak and cheese, served with pickled vegetables and grilled pita, for delighted tasters at Chefs and Champagne.

Adapted to make 6 to 8 skewers

For the steak and cheese

1/2 cup extra-virgin olive oil
4 to 5 garlic cloves, minced
2 tablespoons finely chopped fresh rosemary
2 tablespoons chopped thyme leaves
Kosher salt and freshly ground pepper to taste
1 pound flat-iron steak cut into 1-inch cubes
2 8-ounce blocks of haloumi* cheese cut into 1-inch cubes
Bamboo skewers, soaked over night

Pickled vegetables

1/2 cup distilled white vinegar

1 cup sugar
1 1/2 cups water
1/2 cup each coarsely chopped cilantro and mint
Thinly sliced cucumber
Paper-thin slices red onion

Grilled pitas for serving

1. Divide the oil, garlic and herbs into two mixing bowls large enough to separately marinate the meat and cheese. Toss the marinade with each component to coat well. Cover the respective bowls and refrigerate for one and up to two days. Soak the skewers in preparation of cooking.

2. Meanwhile, place the vinegar, sugar and water in a saucepan and bring to a boil over high heat while stirring to dissolve the sugar. Adjust heat to a brisk simmer and cook liquid for about 5 minutes. Pour into a glass bowl and cool completely. Add the cilantro and mint and stir to mix. Thinly sliced vegetables and add to the pickling liquid. Cover and refrigerate. Prepare the recipe at least one day ahead or longer.

3. When ready to serve prepare your grill to high heat. Oil the grates generously to prevent sticking. Meanwhile, alternately skewer the meat and cheese and grill about 2 1/2 to 3 minutes on each side. Serve with pickled vegetables and grilled pita.

The above recipe is an adaptation of Chef McBride's presentation. Haloumi, a cheese from Cypress that can stand up to the heat of the grill, is available at King Kullen in Bridgehampton.

Greenport Harbor Brewing Co. Gets Crafty

BY DAN KOONTZ

Greenport has long been synonymous with quaint maritime scenery and fresh seafood. Over the last four years, thanks to Greenport Harbor Brewing Company, Greenport has developed another claim to fame: it's home to some of the best local beer in the state.

A recent trip to Greenport Harbor's tasting room, located right in downtown Greenport, provided ample evidence of this small brewery's achievements. A tasting included samples of five of their delicious offerings, from their signature Greenport Harbor Ale, a pale ale with a hoppy zing to it, to their Devil's Plaything IPA, which includes Guajillo and Thai chili peppers (it's specially brewed for a New York taco restaurant). Also on tap was their #4, a fourth anniversary commemorative brew, made with German noble hops that give it a very distinctive quality. All of the beer is currently produced on-premises, which is quite a feat.

That's because last year the brewery produced close to 6,000 kegs of beer right in Greenport, brewing at full capacity. They supply their beer to over 450 bars and restaurants across Long Island, New York and upstate. Currently, Greenport Harbor is working on expanding into a larger space in Peconic. But don't worry, they're keeping their flagship Greenport location open. And even though they've been known to run low on certain popular styles of beer during the long, hot summer, one thing they don't plan to do is farm any of their brewing out to larger, industrial breweries—a practice known as contract brewing. (Read carefully: is your "local" beer actually brewed in Utica?)

"We are adamant about the complete authenticity of brewing all of our beer locally," says Rich

Vandenburgh, who founded Greenport Harbor with his college friend John Liegey. "We just feel that's the only way to maintain the highest quality, and we find that our customers are enthusiastic about the local aspect of the beer." Their new space in Peconic, in the former Lucas Ford showroom on Route 25, will allow them to increase their output, and will include a bottling facility to make it easier for customers to enjoy Greenport Harbor beer at home.

The Peconic location will also feature a brewpub and beer garden, with food and full pints—Greenport Harbor is restricted from pouring full pints at their current tasting room. Vandenburg says they expect to begin operations there in the fall.

Greenport Harbor Brewing Company may have only just turned four years old, but it's already an old-timer by Long Island micro-brewery standards.

"When we opened there were around three micro-breweries on Long Island," says Vandenburg. "Since then, micro-breweries have sprung up all over." This reflects a growing, nationwide trend towards locally-produced beer, which in turn reflects the burgeoning locavore movement and the farm-to-table ideal.

In fact, there's a movement in beer production called farm-to-pint, where many micro-breweries across the country are exploring sourcing their ingredients from nearby farms. Greenport Harbor Brewing Company is very much onboard with this idea, with Vandenburg citing Condella Hops in Wading River as a source of fresh hops that the brewery uses. (See story about Condella Hops, p XX)

"What needs to happen is for the infrastructure to be created to allow for the processing of the local hops," says Vandenburg, explaining that brewers typically require pelletized hops in their processes.

Then there's the grain—not really a specialty of Long Island agriculture. Beer generally uses malted barley, or barley that has undergone a special germination process to produce the sugars necessary for fermentation. According to Vandenburg, Greenport Harbor is seeking to contract with a local farmer to plant a field of winter barley for a spring harvest. The barley will then be malted in facilities upstate, and brewed together with local hops, the resulting beer will be about as farm-to-pint as Long Islanders can reasonably expect.

It wasn't so long ago that beer was considered a fairly rudimentary drink, with subtle variations in flavor (or lack thereof) among the few national brands you could find in the store. Now, Greenport Harbor Brewing Company and other micro-breweries are slowly educating Americans about the wide variation in flavors that are possible, and an exciting new beer culture is emerging—one that emphasizes regional flavors and preferences. You can experience the new beer culture first hand at Greenport Harbor Brewing Company.

Create Cocktails Like A Pro

BY BO SMITH

I received two unexpected bottles of liquor at the beginning of the week; one was a bottle of New Zealand's Broken Shed Premium Vodka and the other a bottle of Partida Blanco Tequila. They even enclosed recipes. The drive home had me excited. That evening proved sensational.

We all need to cool off during this scorch of a summer, and tequila is the solution. If the hot Mexican sun has been slain by tequila, the hot Long Island sun should be no sweat. Estate-bottled Partida Tequila can be enjoyed neat—its subtle pepper and agave flavors are beautifully smooth. As a mixer, the tequila truly shines, perfectly accenting the sweet and sour notes of a margarita. Made world famous from behind the bar at Tommy's Mexican Restaurant in San Francisco, the signature Pardita Margarita will dazzle.

We need to cool off during the summer. If the hot Mexican sun has been slain by Tequila, the hot Long Island sun should be no sweat.

Taste for balance.

Broken Shed Vodka is a blockbuster. Produced exclusively in the Southern Alps of New Zealand, Broken Shed is a quality vodka with an extremely clean, frosty and mighty feeling. Its burly attitude might come from its whey spirit, but more likely this is just the way of the Kiwi. Actually started in an old shed at the banks of New Zealand's Lake Wanaka, Broken Shed is an award-winner and crowd-pleaser world round. I prefer my vodka neat, but for all you lightweights out there, try the Broken Berry, a summer special.

The Hottest Address
 in the Hamptons this Summer...

DansPapers.com
 This is the Hamptons!

Restaurant Review: 75 Main

BY ALLYSON ZACHAROFF

I think I would find little opposition if I claimed that the streets of Southampton Village have some of the most iconic views of the Hamptons, from the Agawam Park's location on the water to the movie theatre on Hill Street, and the well-loved 75 Main Restaurant and Lounge takes advantage of it all with its prime real estate on Main Street. But if the classic view is wonderful, it's nothing next to the food.

I headed out for dinner last Wednesday evening with Mama Z, very eager to sample some of 75 Main's contemporary dishes since I have been meaning to try the restaurant for years. Mama and I opted for air conditioning when choosing our table inside the restaurant, even though the beauty of sitting right outside on the sidewalk in Southampton was almost too much to resist. The interior décor was very tastefully selected, too—dark woods and white linens gave the air a classic, yet unpretentious look (despite the fact that it is a regular hot-spot for celebs visiting the Hamptons).

The place to be...

Mama Z's appetizer selection consisted of roasted asparagus wrapped in prosciutto. After one bite, she shouted, "It's a party in my mouth!"

I decided to start my meal off with the 75 Main Chopped Salad. What I thought would be a simple opener was actually a huge mound of delicious lettuce topped with Gorgonzola, roasted red peppers, candied walnuts, dried cranberries, red onion and balsamic vinaigrette. Yum! The mix of flavors was the perfect introduction to the melding of flavors that seems to characterize the menu, which was recently revamped when the new chef Mark Militello came to the restaurant this season. Militello has developed quite a following amongst foodies both here and around the country, most recently celebrating success at a restaurant in Florida, and he has even served as a food critic for The New York Times. In another contemporary take on a melding of flavors, Mama Z's appetizer selection consisted of roasted asparagus wrapped in prosciutto with a poached egg on the side. After just one bite, she all but shouted, "this is a definite party in my mouth. It's amazing!" I had to agree after she gave me a taste, as the combination of salty egg with the warmth of the asparagus was a very nice combination. Mama Z also started off the meal with dry rosé, the "Juliette" selection from Côtes de Provence, France that added a nice subtle flavor to her starter. Though we unfortunately did not see any local wines on the menu, there were extensive appealing options from many other places around the world, including New Zealand and California.

For dinner, I selected a Truffle Crumb Stuffed Breast of Chicken, as I always like seeing how restaurants deal with the simplicity of chicken. While the sauce on my chicken was a little strong, the accompanying Portobello fries (strips of Portobello mushrooms, breaded and fried to perfection) were incredibly unique. Mama Z ordered the Filet Mignon topped with a Gorgonzola sauce, which was so delicious that I eventually stole her plate from her to finish off some of the delicious sauce that was left behind. We were also sorely tempted by the special that night, a Braised Lamb Shank with lentils, pancetta, and red onion, which sounded like another great mix of flavors.

Even though our stomachs told us "no," our mouths were quickly saying "yes" when we took a look at the dessert menu. I opted for two scoops of the homemade sorbet (mango and passion fruit that day), while Mama went with the Oreo Cookie-Crusted Budino Pudding. Coming from a non-dessert lover, I have to say that her dessert was something all its own, and worth heading to 75 Main just for that. It was a layered confection in a clear glass, not unlike a parfait, and it had Oreos and warm pudding and whipped cream and caramel sauce and happiness. If you order nothing else, order this.

Overall, 75 Main lived up to the enormous expectations I built up for it in my mind. Chef Militello has artfully crafted a menu that is both delicious and exciting, all in the unique atmosphere that is Main Street, Southampton.

“Wine Down” In Your Own Vineyard

BY KELLY ANN KRIEGER

There are many variables to consider when deciding whether or not to go into the business of winemaking. From harvesting the grapes to creating the finest vintages—there's a great deal of knowledge and an enormous amount of passion needed to succeed.

Whether in Tuscany, Italy, Napa Valley, California or the North Fork of Long Island, the key to quality grapes weighs heavily on the growing and harvesting process. Long Island's North Fork is now known as “Wine Country” for good reason. The East End offers acres and acres of rich farmland coupled with excellent growing conditions—making it capable of producing some of the finest world-class vintages today.

For those who may be considering buying or investing in an established vineyard, there are a few hot prospects. Starting with Las Cotes Vineyards in Aquebogue—Las Cotes is a 26.4-acre farm with nine acres of planted vineyard. Nestled in the perfect location for vineyard goers, Las Cotes successfully produces Cabernet Sauvignon, Merlot, Sauvignon Blanc, Syrah, Malbec and Pinot Gris. For those investors interested in expanding, the land offers ample space to grow a flourishing vegetable or flower farm. Las Cotes is an affordable investment for the right buyer. Listed on landandfarm.com.

Next up, we have the award winning Palmer Vineyards. With 30 years of excellence, this North Fork gem is a one-of-a-kind deal. The 62-acre vineyard includes 5.5 acres located on Sound Avenue that is home to the vineyards state-of-the-art winemaking facility and tasting room. Palmer boasts over 48 acres of premier varietals including Merlot, Chardonnay, Pinot Blanc, Cabernet Franc, Cabernet Sauvignon, Sauvignon Blanc, Gewurztraminer and Riesling. The vineyard hosts an array of special events, weddings and private functions. Palmer is well-respected in the industry and has received praise amongst peers and awards including Gold, Silver and Bronze medals from the Beverage Testing Institute World Wine Championships, Tasters Guild International, The San Francisco Chronicle, Finger Lakes International Wine Competition, Lodi International Wine Awards as well as excellent reviews in The New York Times and Newsday. With an average of 400 to 700 visitors per day, this special vineyard is a popular favorite. Listed on vinesmart.com.

“Vineyard markets in sought-after locations often small and discrete, and without guidance, buyers never know they are on the market. It's common for more than half of our vineyards to be privately listed, never advertised and never placed on a website,” said Micheal Baynes, Christies Real Estate Property Specialist in Bordeaux, christiesrealestate.com.

If you have the “wine bug” or desire to break into the business, there are always opportunities—Just take notes from some of our favorite celebrities like Drew Barrymore who recently ventured into the industry with her label Barrymore Wines based out of Italy, or Francis Ford Coppola who has been a successful winemaker for years with a vineyard in the Napa Valley region of California or perhaps even singer/songwriter Dave Matthews who paired up with veteran winemaker Steve Reeder to create the ever-so-popular, Dreaming Tree Wines—the list goes on and on.

“The better the grapes, the better the wine” is a standard reference when talking about the art of winemaking. Long Island continues to produce some of the most delicious wines on the market today. Maybe you have what it takes to be part of this fascinating and evolving

Q&A with Geoff Gifkins of Nest Seekers

BY DAVID LION RATTNER

The Hamptons real estate market is one of the most exciting real estate markets on the planet, but it's also one that requires local expertise. That's why this week we spoke with Geoff Gifkins, the Regional Manager Associate Broker with Nest Seekers International in Southampton, for his outlook and input.

How has the real estate market been this summer?

The summer has been extremely active both for rentals and sales, with all spectrums of the market moving.

What have been the hottest areas to buy?

The hottest markets are Southampton Village, Sag Harbor and Amagansett.

Where do you see the market heading in the future?

The market will improve as we head into the fall. Properties that are priced to meet the market and are presented well will move.

Are we in a buyers market right now or a sellers market?

We are still in a buyers market as we have a surplus of inventory, but this is beginning to shift. We have seen some properties go into bidding wars so that is a clear sign of the shift.

What are some of your favorite areas in the Hamptons in terms of real estate?

The villages of East Hampton, Sag Harbor and Southampton continue to be leaders in terms of number of homes sold.

What's some advice that you would give to a prospective buyer today in this market?

The villages of East Hampton, Sag Harbor and Southampton continue to be leaders in terms of number of homes sold.

In this market buyers need to work with a diligent experience realtor to be fully educated on the market and find the best property that meets their needs.

How about a seller?

Sellers need to price their properties correctly to meet the market, understand how their property competes in this market and choose a realtor that will show showcase their property in the best light possible that will attract buyers.

Courtesy Nest Seekers

Geoff Gifkins of Nest Seekers

What price range can a buyer find the best deals right now?

A great deal can mean many things to different buyers but it really comes down to knowing the market and being ready to respond when the opportunity arises.

Why do you think certain areas have been hotter out here than others?

Amagansett and Montauk are the essential beach resort towns and will always be in high demand.

Is this a repeat of the real estate mania that we've seen in the past, or is this a healthy market now?

We are seeing a healthy market as sales increase with location and quality and are seeing significant advances, especially with new construction.
